I.C.C. Control Of Air Pushed With Message By Roosevelt

President Urges Larger Plane Fleet, One Training Airship.

Dirigible Service Is Recommended

Upper House's Action Favors Extending Air Mail Laws.

By Leon Dure, Jr.

The Administration moved one step nearer its goal of bringing all transportation under the Interstate Commerce Commission yesterday when President Roosevelt submitted to Congress the far-flung plans of the Federal Aviation Commission.

As leaders awaited a further message from the White House specifically proposing this action, the Senate adopted a measure by Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney (Democrat), of Wyoming, giving the air transport industry a six-month "breathing spell."

The O'Mahoney bill authorizes the extension of air-mail contracts from March 1, when the present awards will expire, until September 1. This would prevent "upsetting and unnecessary" bidding for new contracts until legislation has been enacted.

In his message accompanying the aviation report, Mr. Roosevelt said he will ask Congress "at a later date" to centralize supervision of air, water and highway transportation with certain "adjustments of our present methods of organization."

Wants No Commission.

The President indorsed, by implication, all but one of the commission's recommendations. These were sweeping in nature and included the proposal that the Government sponsor a transatlantic passenger service with dirigibles.

Mr. Roosevelt said, however, that he was "unable to concur" in the recommendation for a "temporary air commerce commission." This statement brought expressions of puzzlement from those who drafted the report.

"We had no idea that the commission we proposed would be temporary," declared Franklin K. Lane, jr., a member of the aviation group. He added that he was not criticizing the President.

Rather, the report suggested a commission which would serve until aviation has "grown up," it was said. The commission then would be consolidated with the new transportation agency to be created out of the Interstate Commerce Commission, it was explained.

Says I. C. C. Can Serve.

"I believe that we should avoid the multiplication of separate regulatory agencies in the field of transportation," the President wrote in rejecting this plan.

"Therefore in the interim before a permanent consolidated agency is created or designated over transportation as a whole, a division of the Interstate Commerce Commission can well serve the needs of air transportation."

That the President has as his ulti-

Boulder Dam Set to Operate

Mighty Project Starts Harnessing Colorado River Today.

Boulder City, Nev., Jan. 31 (AP).—A huge gate will drop shut at 7 a. m. tomorrow and the flow of the Colorado River will be stopped by Boulder Dam, greatest structure of its kind in the world.

Thus will begin the formation of a lake 11 times larger than man ever built before. It will mark the taming of the Colorado.

Forty years ago this river was put to work, down near its delta, and the Imperial Valley of southern California came into production. But the Colorado was unruly. Turbulent floods swept into the fertile valley, causing $8,000,000 damage in 1905. This catastrophe prompted President Theodore Roosevelt to ask Congress to have a study made of how to harness the river.

Twenty-five years later that project was completed on paper and engineers set in motion the $385,000,000 Boulder Dam project.

Congress authorized the seven States of the Colorado River basin—Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, Nevada, California, Arizona and New Mexico—to form a compact for the development. Arizona objected that benefits offered to that State were not equitable.

The other six States ratified the compact, but Arizona held aloof. The Government finally authorized a six-State compact and construction got under way.

Boulder Dam will provide electrical energy of 1,800,000 horsepower, reclamation of 2,100,000 acres and domestic water supply for future millions of people in southern California, as well as preventing floods.

Construction work was started on the dam September 17, 1930.

(Associated Press.)

The purported diary of a self-described "everyday business man," telling of a naval shipbuilders' agreement the efforts of which were said to have reached even into the White House, was opened yesterday by the Senate Munitions Committee.

This unusual document was introduced near nightfall by W. F. Larouche, slender, dapperly dressed committee investigator. Its author, he asserted, was Arthur P. Homer, naval architect, whose career was described as rising from jobs as a salesman of revolving doors and paint at $25 a week.

The diary, as read by Larouche, contained allegations that a group of shipbuilders had agreed to share naval contracts, and stories of visits by naval officials to the White House purportedly in behalf of the architect's clients.

The stir caused by these statements followed an earlier tense passage, when Laurence Wilder, head of Gulf Industries of Pensacola, a shipbuilding company, asserted his company was not awarded contracts despite low bids, and that he thought the Navy was "coerced" and "forced by political pressure."

An effort to bring Homer to the stand for direct testimony failed when members were informed that he was ill.

Late in the day, however, a statement was sent to various newspaper offices under Homer's name, making no mention of the alleged diary, but asserting that an investigation of his office had "revealed no more than the workings of any honest business man's office." He described himself as an "everyday business man."

MARVIN H. McINTYRE.

One entry in the diary told of conferences at Hyde Park, the President's home town, and other efforts made to get the Bath Iron Works, of Bath, Me., a contract for two destroyers.

"Bids for the naval program destroyers were opened," said a notation in the memorandum under date of July 26, 1933, "and Admiral

Code Expiring, Auto Leaders See Roosevelt

By Felix Bruner.

President Roosevelt and NRA officials last night still were seeking a solution of the problem resulting from expiration of the automobile code. The life of the code, containing important labor provisions, was to end at midnight. Definite action was promised before that hour.

The action was expected to take the form of extension of the code, with some modification, and probably a promise of consideration of further changes in the near future. It is not expected, however, that the action will meet with approval of labor representatives who are violently opposed to the code in anything even resembling its present form.

Confer With Roosevelt.

President Roosevelt conferred late in the day with Walter P. Chrysler, head of Chrysler Motors, and Alfred P. Sloan, chairman of the board of General Motors. Accompanying them were Donald R. Richberg, New Deal coordinator, and S. Clay Williams, chairman of the National Industrial Recovery Board.

Chrysler and Sloan left the conference ahead of Richberg and Williams.

"We left some suggestions," Chrysler said. "I don't know what they are going to do."

Richberg later said a series of conferences had been held with all interested parties, including labor representatives, and that further conferences were planned.

"We have got to do something," he said. "We have got to do it tonight."

The final decision is expected to be influenced by the report of the Research and Planning Division of the NRA, which has recommended radical changes in manufacturing practices to spread employment and iron out production peaks. The report, understood to contain considerable criticism of the industry in its relations to labor, has not been made public.

Meanwhile, the Associated Press reported from Lansing, Mich., that the Fisher Body Corporation plant

Soviets Spurn Japanese Plan To Stack Guns

Proposal to Demilitarize Border Refused; Congress Jeers at Tokyo.

Moscow, Jan. 31 (AP).—Jeers today greeted mention of Japan's activities in Manchuria as delegates to the seventh all-union Soviet congress heard Vyacheslaff Molotoff, Russia's virtual premier, reject Japanese suggestions that the Siberia-Manchukuo frontier be demilitarized.

With cheers the 2,500 delegates yesterday had greeted the announcement that the Red army, in the last four years, had grown from 600,000 to 940,000 men.

Molotoff, whose official title is president of the council of people's commissars, accused Japan of flagrant violation of the Portsmouth Treaty, signed in 1905 at the conclusion of the Russo-Japanese war, which provided for demilitarization of Russo-Japanese frontiers on Sakhalin Island and between Korea and Siberia.

Japan Is Jeered.

Molotoff provoked laughter when he remarked that the Portsmouth Treaty also pledged Russia and Japan to guarantee China's sovereign rights in Manchuria, and the Island Empire was jeered as the premier referred to her recent activities in that region.

The speaker, whose address closed discussion of his four-day report of Bolshevist progress since the last all-union congress in 1931, said he agreed with Koki Hirota, Japanese foreign minister, who recently proposed demilitarization of the Manchukuo-Siberia frontier, that a nonaggression agreement would not be sufficient to secure good relations between Japan and Russia.

Japan's refusal to sign such an agreement, however, would not be proof of her peaceful intentions, the premier added.

Obligations of Treaty.

Molotoff explained to the delegates that the Portsmouth Treaty obligated both signatories to withdraw their armies from Manchuria and provided that the Manchurian railways should be used only for

'Baby Bonds' on Sale March 1; Roosevelt to Buy the First One

(Associated Press.)

Almost on the eve of the expected Supreme Court decision on gold—involving millions in its own predevaluation bonds—the Treasury yesterday set for March 1 the opening of a new financing move by means of a "baby bond" issue.

President Roosevelt was chosen to give impetus to the drive through purchase of bond "A-1."

Officials meanwhile continued to study means of averting what Government counsel has told the Supreme Court would be an economic crisis if the court should hold against the Government in the gold cases.

The "baby bonds" will be issued in denominations from $25 to $10,000 and sold principally through postoffices. Sale of postal savings bonds is to be discontinued July 1.

Like all the rest of the new series, bond "A-1" will not leave the keeping of the Government. President Roosevelt will be given a receipt which can not be sold to any individual and is redeemable only at the Treasury.

The interest—the rate is still to be determined—will be figured over a ten-year period and the amount deducted from the purchase price. Thus, at 2½ per cent, for instance, a $25 bond would be sold for something more than $19.

At the end of ten years the Government would repurchase it for the full $25. After six months have passed, the holder may present his bond for redemption and receive interest to the date of presentation.

The Treasury now has a cash balance of $2,330,000,000, ample to keep it going for some time. However, it figures that it must borrow nearly $7,000,000,000 in the next seventeen months, in addition to large refinancing.

Hull Blasts Debt Accord With Soviet

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Suddenly and without diplomatic trimmings, the negotiations between the United States and Soviet Russia for a solution of the 16-year-old debt and claims controversy collapsed yesterday without any hope of being revived in the near future.

Secretary of State Cordell Hull brought the negotiations to an end when Soviet Ambassador Alexander Troyanovsky rejected a proposal made last September by this Government for the settlement of the $500,000,000 debt-claim dispute and for the financing of Russian purchases in this country.

With the collapse of the debt conversations, hopes for stimulating a large volume of foreign trade between this country and Russia went aglimmering. This development marked the first serious setback given Soviet-American relations since this country granted recognition in October, 1933.

Bearing on Far East Noted.

Aside from expressions of regret over the lost trade possibilities with the Soviets, some observers regarded the breakdown in the conversations as having a bearing on Far Eastern affairs. When the United States recognized the Soviets, this country was regarded as creating a friendship with a power at Japan's back door, a country none too friendly with the Nipponese, at that. The Soviet-American friendship was given a jolt yesterday.

The point of insoluble controversy between this Government and the Soviets, it is reliably understood, was not the sum at which United States claims should be settled, but Russian insistence on a long-term cash loan by this country. Secretary Hull, it is further understood, agreed to provide through the Export-Import Bank a credit of $100,000,000 to finance Soviet purchases in this country, but he flatly refused to make any cash advance to the Moscow government.

The impasse in the negotiations had existed since last September. At that time the State Department was pessimistic about their outcome and asserted it had "gone the limit in making concessions" and to go any further "would be an unthinkable sacrifice of the public interest."

A collapse in the conversations at that time, however, was averted when Ambassador Troyanovsky decided to return to Moscow and discuss the American proposal with his superiors. He returned only last week with his government's answer that it could not accept the American offer.

Envoy Appears Dejected.

Mr. Troyanovsky revealed the Soviet attitude yesterday at a conference with Secretary Hull and other State Department officials which lasted exactly five minutes. Apparently Mr. Hull told the ambassador there was nothing more to be said, for Mr. Troyanovsky appeared both surprised and dejected as he left the Secretary's suite, declining any comment.

Secretary Hull conferred for almost three hours with Assistant Secretary of State R. Walton Moore, American Ambassador to Russia William C. Bullitt and Robert F. Kelley, chief of the division of

Realty Boom Here Equals Days of War

$300,000 Building and Increase in Fees Are Sought.

Washington real estate is enjoying a boom unparalleled since war days, the semiannual report of William J. Tompkins, recorder of deeds, disclosed yesterday.

In his report, which he sent to President Roosevelt, Tompkins pointed out that during the first half of the present fiscal year his office showed a 40 per cent increase in volume over the corresponding period for the fiscal year 1934.

"During this time," the report read, "there has been an increase of 8,251 papers, which would amount to a daily increase over the preceding six-month period of 59 papers; a weekly increase in business * * * of 350 papers, and a monthly increase of 1,420 papers, which is represented by a total cash increase in business of $12,824.45."

Breaking down his figures making up the 40 per cent increase, Tompkins said that real estate transactions showed a pick-up of 60 per cent, while only one department of the bureau, "certified copies," showed a decrease of 23 per cent.

Other Increases.

Other departments exhibiting a pick-up were chattels, 20 per cent; incorporations, 23 per cent; certificates, 300 per cent, and searches 4 per cent.

Tompkins reported that in his estimation the increase was due to unusual activity in the real estate market. He described realty deals as the backbone of prosperity.

Three major recommendations were contained in the report. First, it was shown, the present office is inadequate and is not fireproof, thus subjecting valuable records to fire menace.

He suggested that a fireproof, modern type office building, to cost about $300,000, be built in an unoccupied portion of Judiciary square, just northeast of the District Supreme Court Building. The cost of the building, he said, could be borne by a slight increase in the service costs of the office.

Asks Boost in Fees.

Another recommendation was that the fees which are now, he said, far below the prices charged by comparable cities, be brought up to the point where they will cover the actual cost of preparing deeds and other papers. There has been no change in fees since the establishment of the office in 1905, while there has been a steady increase in the amount of work and the cost of operation. With a slight increase in prices, Tompkins said he believed the cost of the proposed new building could be met within three years, and his office would then not have a high rental to pay.

A belief that the present system of recording land holdings is obsolete and inadequate was expressed. Instead of the "grantor-grantee" system now in vogue, the recorder asked that the "lot-and-square" system be used. The latter would enable a quick and complete search of the title of any piece of property. It now requires many days, he said, to run down title to property that is changing hands.

The installation of the "lot-and-square" system would cost approximately $18,000 but its cost would be borne by "doing away with the burden of the taxpayers in having prepared each year a vast number of title abstracts."

Mr. Tompkins estimated there were 20,000 such cases a year with

New Numbers Racket Appears; Crime Body to Hear Blanton

Tickets Printed Now, as in Lottery; Linked to La Fontaine.

Sensational Evidence Is Promised by Texan at Hearing Today.

By Edward T. Folliard.

The appearance of a new type of "numbers" game ticket in Washington has led the police to conclude that the racket here is being organized on a big-business basis.

Heretofore the writing of numbers tickets has been informal and haphazard in the extreme. The runner simply would write down the number desired by the bettor on a small scratch pad containing a piece of carbon paper. He would give the original to the bettor and keep the carbon copy for his boss.

The new tickets are printed on a regular form in two colors. Each bears two numbers, one the gambling number, and the other "for office use only," an efficiency device to prevent runners from stealing from the boss.

Who is the boss? The police do not know, but information has reached them that it might be the much hounded Jimmy LaFontaine. At least, they know one of the runners is a man employed by Jimmy.

The big gambling house that Jimmy operated on Bladensburg road just across the District line remains closed. Not since the holidays, when Washington police be-

Representative Thomas L. Blanton, of Texas, chief proponent of sensational investigations of District police and other affairs in the past, is to take the stand as a volunteer witness when the District crime investigating committee resumes its executive hearings at 10:30 a. m. today.

Blanton told Representative Jennings Randolph (Democrat), of West Virginia, committee chairman, he had "sensational" information to give.

"I never make the same speech twice. I'm going to save this one for the committee in the morning," Blanton said, parrying questions by newspaper reporters regarding his proposed testimony.

Representative Randolph said he had immediately granted the Texan's request without asking questions. Other members of the committee also said they did not know what Blanton intended to say.

Sharp criticism of the numbers games and other gambling in the Capital was voiced by Blanton in a signed statement made public recently.

"No open gambling in violation of law can continue long without police protection," he said. "Our

Three Witnesses Back Alibi of Hauptmann; Gang Link Supported

Ex-Convict Says He Saw Two in Auto With Ladder.

Asked Directions To Flier's Estate

Testimony That Suspect Was in Bronx Night of Crime Grows.

(Copyright, 1935, by the United Press.)

Flemington, N. J., Jan. 31.—Three men who have journeyed over the line that divides law and lawlessness filed across the witness stand today to try to keep Bruno Richard Hauptmann out of the electric chair.

There they came—former bootlegger, former convict and former speakeasy proprietor—in as weird a parade as may ever be seen in any courtroom.

The attorney general of New Jersey reached back into his files and spread out on the court record for all to hear and read the shabby past that these men have lived.

But when he got through the fact remained that the defense had wedged into this trial the first piece of testimony that a gang—and not Hauptmann—conceived and executed the Lindbergh kidnaping.

Story of Kidnap Day.

Lou Harding came into court with a lumberjack's sweater around his shoulders, a rough shirt open at the throat and a pair of heavy shoes. He didn't care whether anybody knew he had been sent up to the Rahway Reformatory in 1931 for assault and battery, didn't care whether anybody knew that he had spent 43 days in the Mercer County Workhouse for an assault on a woman. He volunteered some of that information himself.

He wanted to brush it out of the way quickly and get down to another story. His story concerned events on March 1, 1932, the day Charles A. Lindbergh, jr., was kidnaped and killed.

Harding said he was on the Princeton road that day when an automobile stopped near him.

"What time of day was that?" asked Edward J. Reilly, chief defense counsel.

"About 2 p. m. I walked over when the car stopped and one of the men asked me the way to the Lindbergh estate."

"Two Men in Car."

"There were two men in the car?"

"Yes. I gave them the directions and then I saw something on the floor of their automobile."

"What was it?"

"A ladder. It was daylight and I got a good look."

Reilly ordered the ladder that was found 70 feet from the Lindbergh house after the kidnaping brought into court. The heavy, red-faced lawyer went over and slapped his hand on one board in the rude ladder.

"I show you this State's exhibit," he said. "Was this the ladder you saw in that car?"

Harding swung and looked at it.

"Yes; that's the ladder."

"Did you ever see this ladder again before today?"

"Oh, yes; I went up to the Lindbergh house the day after the kidnaping and there it was."

"You went up to tell your story to police?"

"Yes."

Now Reilly was ready to forge the last link in this important chain of evidence.

"Tell me, if you will," he said "whether either one of the men in that automobile was this defendant, Hauptmann?"

"Wasn't Hauptmann."

Harding looked down across 30 feet of courtroom into the eyes of Hauptmann. The prisoner, arms folded, stared back at him.

"No."

Borah Urges Quiz in Mexico Persecutions

Idahoan Assails 'Cruelties' to Christians; Charges Denied by Embassy.

Investigation and Senate denunciation of religious persecution and the exercise of "cruelties and brutalities" by the Mexican government were proposed yesterday in a resolution by Senator William E. Borah (Republican), of Idaho.

The resolution was referred to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, which the Idahoan would have conduct an inquiry into "religious persecution and antireligious compulsion and agitation in Mexico for the purpose of determining the policy of the United States in reference to this vital problem and in what way we may best serve the cause of tolerance and religious freedom."

The Mexican embassy promptly issued a statement declaring there was no religious persecution in Mexico.

Cites Cardenas Statement.

"The resolution in regard to this matter which was presented at the Senate today is probably due either to partial or incomplete information," the statement said.

The embassy called attention to a statement by President Cardenas of Mexico—on January 25—which said it was not true that the government persecutes "any citizen for practicing the Catholic religion or any other." The embassy said that all clergymen, Catholics included, who complied with the laws "are exercising their ministry in Mexico City and elsewhere throughout the republic without being molested in the least."

Senator Walsh (Democrat), Massachusetts, predicted, however, that the Senate would approve promptly the Borah proposal.

Senator Borah presented the resolution after conferences with other Senators. Many religious organizations, particularly those affiliated with the Catholic Church, have protested to the Senate against the persecution of Christians in Mexico by the present revolutionary government.

Attack Follows Woman's Offer To Aid Wilentz

New York, Jan. 31 (AP).—Unconscious, bound and gagged in her burning Bronx beauty parlor, Mrs. Fannette Rivkin—who had offered to testify for the State in the Hauptmann trial—was rescued today by the building superintendent.

Attorney General David T. Wilentz, of New Jersey, said that the woman, revived by an ambulance physician, had offered to testify, but he had not decided whether to call her. He declined to reveal the nature of her possible testimony.

Babbling hysterically after the physician worked for a half hour to restore her to consciousness, Mrs. Rivkin would only say:

"I'll say I don't know who did it. I'm not going to tell, I swear."

But her husband, Simon Rivkin, excitedly told police he believed he could identify the man who, entering the parlor at about 9 a. m., bound his wife with a window cord, stuffed links of a chain in her mouth and after binding her to a chair set it on fire. She escaped being burned by wrestling free and falling to the floor.

"I think I know who did it," the husband asserted. "I have my suspicions. I can name the man right now. I'll have Wilentz know about this."

Subsequently, Mrs. Rivkin told of turning from a wash stand to face a man wearing a wig and a false mustache who seized her.

John Espinosa, the building superintendent, noticed the smoke coming from the building and entered the parlor. He then summoned an ambulance. Firemen extinguished the flames which caused but little damage.

Flemington, N. Townsend to 'Sell' Pension Plan Before House Committee Today

By Douglas Warrenfels.

Standing room only signs probably will be displayed today as Dr. F. E. Townsend, the crusading country doctor, appears before the House Ways and Means Committee in behalf of his old-age pension plan.

While virtually all the committee members are opposed to the Californian's proposal for a $200 a month gratuity to all law-abiding persons over 60, he will be given his day in court as a courtesy. He will make a 10 minute speech and then answer questions.

The decision to hear Townsend was reached after committee wheelhorses agreed they would be in a better position when they favorably report the Administration supported Wagner-Lewis bill if they could tell the House that advocates of all other old age and unemployment insurance programs had been questioned.

It is expected that a substantial number of House members not on the committee will hear Townsend to get first-hand information on his scheme. He probably will be asked many pointed questions by those who regard his plan as economically unsound and fantastic.

The Townsend plan was ridiculed at yesterday's hearing by Dr. Abram Epstein, expert on old-age pension plans.

"Think of old people in a cabaret," he said, "trying to stay up until 2 or 3 in the morning and drinking champagne in an attempt to spend their money. If you were to give $200 to these old people a lot of them would die of shock."

Yesterday's hearing was marked by the forcible ejection of Herbert

'Works' Action By Committee Set Tomorrow

Peoples Still Fails to Give Definite Data; Ickes Called Today.

By Robert C. Albright.

After four days of groping for facts and figures behind the President's $4,880,000,000 works and relief bill, members of the Senate Appropriations Committee admitted last night they are still in the dark on how the fund will be spent.

Weary of hammering away at Rear Admiral Christian Peoples for more definite data, the committee turned for enlightenment to Relief Administrator Harry L. Hopkins, summoned Public Works Administrator Ickes to appear today, then informally decided to act on the bill tomorrow.

Will Report Bill.

What they will do is conjectural, but it appeared last night the President will get the huge sum he asks, with few major limitations, and with earmarkings, if any, largely confined to the approximately $400,000,000 to be spent on highways.

Chairman Carter Glass, fighting little Senator from Virginia, replied to queries with a good-natured shrug.

"I don't think a breakdown of this bill is possible," he said. "I don't think there is anybody who knows what the bill will be or should be."

Rid of one thing he was certain—that the committee received no more information from Admiral Peoples, Treasury procurement chief, than he had previously given, and, after nearly a week of hearings, still doesn't know who wrote the measure.

Report Exhibited.

Peoples had been asked to return to the committee yesterday with estimates supporting the huge program. Instead he brought a report of the National Resources Board, and suggested that the President choose at discretion from the $40,000,000,000 in proposed projects there enumerated.

Hopkins told the committee later that he favored the bill, but played no role in its drafting. He estimated that some $20,000,000 in current relief funds will last through February 10, when the first of the $880,000,000 contained in the bill for direct relief would be needed.

Under questioning by Senator Carey (Republican), Wyoming, he conceded the entire $4,000,000,000 fund could be spent in a year if the estimated $1,200 per capita to provide work relief for 3,500,000 of unemployed is fully expended. Witnesses gathered the proposed transition from direct to work relief will not take place until late summer.

It was on request of Senator Hale, of Maine, ranking minority member of the committee, that Ickes was asked to appear today. If other Senators join in, the examination may be a gruelling one. There is considerable Senate resentment of Ickes' policies, and Senators want to know what his part in the new program will be.

Contractors Appear.

Fear that the Government might make vast encroachments on the private construction industry prompted a delegation from the Associated General Contractors, headed by President N. F. Helmers, of St. Paul, to go before the committee. They asked that the work be done on a strictly contract basis, seeking assurance that private construction equipment will not be taken over by Federal or State agencies.

The American Federation of Labor sent W. C. Hushing to request the committee to provide for "prevailing wage scales" on all projects, and delegate authority to Secretary of Labor Perkins to pass on wages. A delegation of union plumbers asked that code wages and hours be continued.

Byrnes "Informed."

Senator Glass freely admitted the President has not taken him into his confidence on the works and relief measure. He said that "with one possible exception" the rest of the committee had no more information than was given by Peoples.

That "exception" probably is Senator James F. Byrnes, of South Carolina, the Virginian's junior on the committee, who was called to the White House last week.

A movement to segregate the $880,000,000 direct relief phase of the bill, and pass that measure first, has gained little headway in the committee. It probably will be abandoned unless an independent effort is made on the Senate floor.

Tenant Farmers Plan Campaign

Sharecroppers Hold Mass Meeting in Open Field.

Memphis, Tenn., Jan. 31 (AP).—Denounced by planters and officers of East Arkansas counties as "radicals," organizers of the Southern Tenant Farmers Union held a mass meeting at Parkin, Ark., about 35 miles west of Memphis, today to outline policies and political alignments.

The meeting in an open field on the edge of Parkin followed a charge by Fred H. Stafford, deputy prosecuting attorney for Poinsett County, that "radical workers" were "fomenting trouble among Southern tenant farmers," and "spreading their propaganda through luncheon clubs and schools."

Ward H. Rodgers, who was discharged by a Federal Emergency Relief Administration instructor after his arrest and conviction on a charge of anarchy, opened the meeting. He said use of the public square in Parkin had been denied them. Leaders of the meeting said there were 350 sharecroppers, farmers and small business men present.

Between You and Me

Labor and the 30-Hour Week; House to Lose McDuffie; The Market and Gold.

—By Raymond Clapper—

DISILLUSIONED with NRA, labor has renewed its drive for the Black 30-hour-week bill. Once before it got behind this bill, in the spring of 1933, and forced it through the Senate. It provides for a flat 30-hour week for industry, and was on the point of passing the House. The Administration regarded it as too drastic a straitjacket and moved in with the recovery act as a substitute.

Once suspected as having taken over NRA, labor now disowns it and has gone back to its original proposal. The Administration is no more anxious to let the bill pass than it was two years ago. The question is what to offer in its place. The hostility of labor has been aroused by the proposal in connection with the works relief bill for an average "security wage" under the Government program of $50 a month. Labor regards this as certain to pull down its wage scales, and is on the warpath. Furthermore, labor is gunning for the automobile industry and is seeking a Senatorial investigation of charges that code labor provisions have been nullified.

Labor is more on the defensive than it was two years ago, however. At that time the emphasis in practically all recovery discussion was upon increasing purchasing power through higher wages. Now the emphasis has shifted to the problem of increasing consumption by lowering costs, in which wages are a large factor. This is especially true of the construction industry. Mr. Roosevelt has tried to sell the plan to labor by pointing out that steadier employment at a lower hour rate would provide a larger annual income for the average worker than spasmodic work at the prohibitive rates still obtaining in some trades.

Cleavage between the Administration and labor over this issue would tend further to strengthen the left-wing forces which constitute the chief political menace to the Administration. These forces, chiefly agrarian, would become vastly strengthened by the addition of large number of industrial workers.

* * * *

Senator Black, chosen by labor to handle both of its 30-hour bill fights, is from Alabama. That means cotton and the Bankheads to the average person. But Black comes from industrial Birmingham, the "Pittsburgh of the South." He has been a political enemy of the Bankheads for years and broke into the Senate by defeating the present Senator Bankhead.

* * * *

Because of its rigid, machine-like structure, the House is about to lose one of its ablest members, John McDuffie, of Alabama. He has accepted a Federal judgeship after running into a series of discouraging breaks in the House.

Coming to Congress immediately after the war, McDuffie worked up to become party whip in 1929. He was able and popular and entered the Speakership fight when the first New Deal Congress came in. But he was caught in a three-cornered race against the late Representative Rainey, who won the Speakership, and Representative Byrns, who became party leader. McDuffie was out of the picture after that. He had lost seniority on important committees and no important chairmanship was due to come his way for some time. A few months ago his colleague, Representative William B. Bankhead, wanted to run for Speaker. McDuffie supported him and Bankhead's election made it impossible for McDuffie, coming from the same State, to aspire to the House leadership.

The House is operated by such iron-bound machinery that an individual member counts for little unless he is Speaker, leader, whip or chairman of a major committee. McDuffie was not interested in being a member without influence. So he is leaving to go on the bench, another instance showing how the House is geared to reward not individual force and ability, but mediocre men who play safe and hang on until those in line ahead of them die out.

New York Stock Exchange officials are reported to be considering suspending trading when the Supreme Court hands down its gold decision, perhaps next Monday. Though nobody ever knows what the Court will do, it is possible that this drastic action may be made unnecessary by withholding the decision until after the market closes.

Whether by accident or design, that is what happened on the recent hot oil decision, which knocked out a section of the recovery act. The Court met at noon and handed down opinions until about 1:50 p. m. Then a group of attorneys was formally presented to the Court by Speaker Byrns and others. As this ceremony usually takes place at the end of a decision hour, it was generally inferred no more opinions would be handed down that day. By the time the presentations were over it was 2 p. m., which is the Court's luncheon hour. The justices, being elderly men and most of them light eaters, take 30 minutes for luncheon. Returning at 2:30 p. m., Chief Justice Hughes began reading the oil decision. The reading required 50 minutes. By 3:10 p. m., he had reached a passage in his opinion which indicated what the Court's decision had been and the word was flashed out by the press, ten minutes after the market closed. The reading of the opinion ended at 3:20 p. m. with the formal announcement of the Court's action in the case.

Senators who kept the United States out of the World Court may not be total isolationists after all. Some of them made haste immediately after rejecting the court to show their interest in what goes on beyond American borders.

Senator Borah, for instance, yesterday introduced a Senate resolution condemning alleged religious persecution in Mexico and proposing a Senate investigation, and although ten members of the Senate Agriculture Committee, including the chairman, voted against the court, they celebrated their victory the next day by opening hearings on how to increase foreign trade.

Senator Wheeler, of Montana, showed some heat when one witness, Oscar Johnston, of the Agriculture Department, twitted the Senators for their paradoxical action in rejecting the court and then seeking a way to revive exports, which, he said, must be based on mutual trade and confidence with foreign nations. Senator Wheeler retorted that it was gratuitous comment.

Vice President Garner was congratulating Senator Joseph T. Robinson, majority leader, on his closing speech for the World Court.

"I feel like the lawyer who had made an eloquent plea, but lost his case," Senator Robinson said. When friends crowded around to congratulate him, he said he would be glad to swap the speech for the verdict.

Citizens Tense As Long Heads For Louisiana

No Revolt, Huey Avers on Way South to Renew 'Plot' Hearing.

Baton Rouge, La., Jan. 31 (AP).—Louisiana was tense tonight as Senator Huey P. Long sped from Washington to fight a revolt against his dictatorship and to reopen his court hearing on charges that antagonistic political leaders and citizens had plotted to kill him.

Slipping out of Washington by train in the early morning, he paused long enough at Atlanta to say there is no revolt in Louisiana "except that all the people are going one way and the Standard Oil crowd another."

Ernest J. Bourgeois, president of the Square Deal Association, leading the revolt, issued a statement at McComb, Miss., saying "enraged citizens from every section of Louisiana were advancing toward Baton Rouge" last Saturday when 100 armed citizens clashed with Long's militia. The incoming caravans, he added, were turned back by "bands of State administration forces."

Several hundred national Baton Rouge enforcing a drastic guardsmen remained on duty in martial law.

'Not Informed' on Session.

Long would say nothing about reports another session of the Louisiana Legislature would be called, asserting he was "not informed" on that subject.

Of the "Square Dealers" who are demanding his removal from dictatorial power, the Senator said "the last time I was down there (in Louisiana) they were all gone."

Long was scheduled to reach New Orleans at 7:20 a. m. tomorrow.

Bourgeois, who came here after a citizens' army of 100 armed men was routed by National Guardsmen at Baton Rouge Saturday, said he would return to Louisiana to be in the fight for "restoration of constitutional government at the proper time."

Appeals to Roosevelt.

The Square Deal Association, organized recently to fight Long's dictatorship, was busy calling for an unarmed march by citizens on the capital and a congressional investigation.

Bourgeois directed an appeal to President Roosevelt and Congress asking that a group of nationally known men, not political officers, be appointed to study the Louisiana situation.

Baton Rouge was quiet, but there was an undercurrent of feeling. The martial law order prohibits utterance or publication of anything which might inflame the public or reflect on State authorities.

Maj. Gen. Myers Retires After 48 Years' Service

San Francisco, Jan. 31 (AP).—Maj. Gen. John T. Myers, commandant of the Department of Pacific of the United States Marine Corps, will retire tomorrow after 48 years of active service. Maj. Gen. James C. Breckenridge will succeed him here.

Gen. Myers participated in the Boxer Rebellion and Philippine campaigns. During the World War he was fleet marine officer of the Atlantic fleet and later commandant of the Marine Barracks at Parris Island, S. C.; service in Cuba, Haiti and Santo Domingo, two years as commandant of the Marine Barracks at Pearl Harbor, T. H., and other tours of duty in Washington, San Diego and here rounded out his career.

Mexico to Subdivide American-Owned Ranch

Brownsville, Tex., Jan. 31 (AP).—Approximately 2,800 acres of the American-owned Lasrusias Ranch have been ordered subdivided and turned over to Mexican agrarians who have applied for parcels, United States Consul Goforth, of Matamoros, was advised today.

Goforth communicated the decision of the agrarian commission of the State of Tamaulipas to American Ambassador Daniels at Mexico City. The ranch has been the subject of representations between the State Department at Washington and Mexico City for several years.

Filipino Constitution Drafted at Convention

Manila, Jan. 31 (AP).—The constitutional convention tonight wrote the last clause into the charter for a commonwealth government of the Philippines and recessed to February 5, before approving the document as a whole.

The Filipino leaders hope to gain President Roosevelt's approval of the constitution and to establish this year a ten-year transitory regime preceding complete independence from the United States. The final session of the convention decided in favor of a one-house legislature of 98 members.

PWA to Erect N.Y. Power Unit

$3,780,000 Is Granted for Project to Generate Federal Current.

The Government yesterday took its first definite step toward entering the electric power business in New York City. Secretary Ickes, PWA administrator, allotted $3,780,000 for erection of a power plant in that city, primarily for the purpose of supplying current to Federal buildings. At present the Government is buying power there and has been protesting against high rates.

The money was turned over to Admiral Christian J. Peoples, head of the Procurement Division of the Treasury. It will be used for buying land, building a main plant and sub-stations and for connecting with the proposed municipal power system in New York.

It is estimated that Government purchases of power now totaling $700,000 a year will be eliminated. Ickes estimated that the annual savings would amount to $152,690 the first year and would increase to $308,020 within 14 years.

Meanwhile, the possibility arose that the St. Lawrence development, still favored by President Roosevelt despite defeat of the treaty with Canada last year, would be made solely a power project.

Senator Lewis, of Illinois, Democratic whip and a leader of the fight on the treaty, suggested that the power development might be concluded through a reciprocal agreement or executive order. Illinois and other Western States based their opposition chiefly on the related proposal to make the St. Lawrence the outlet for Great Lakes shipping and on other questions affecting the use of water.

'Alfalfa Bill' Murray Wanted as Texas Mentor

Austin, Tex., Jan. 31 (AP).—The State Legislature proposed today that the University of Texas employ William ("Alfalfa Bill") Murray, former Governor of Oklahoma, as a professor of government.

Murray, who addressed the Legislature yesterday on his way to Mexico for a vacation, was described in a resolution as "a profound scholar, statesman and philosopher."

Cecil DeMille Wins Tax Plea

Upheld in Fight Against Treasury Claims of Over $1,500,000.

Cecil B. DeMille, motion picture producer, was upheld by the Board of Tax Appeals yesterday in his fight against Treasury tax claims exceeding $1,500,000, the Associated Press reports.

The Internal Revenue Bureau had claimed $1,486,317 was owed by the Cecil B. DeMille Productions, Inc., for accumulating surpluses beyond the reasonable needs of the business to avoid surtaxes by stockholders.

It also had contended DeMille owed $189,487 in additional income taxes for the years 1924 to 1930. But the tax board agreed with DeMille that his wife's earnings should not be included in his taxable income.

The decision ordered a recomputation of the tax liabilities of both petitioners based on the board's findings.

Goodrich Resigns Job On Tax Appeals Board

The resignation of Edgar J. Goodrich, of Charleston, W. Va., as a member of the Board of Tax Appeals, was announced yesterday at the White House.

Goodrich is returning to private law practice. President Roosevelt addressed him the following letter:

"It is a pleasure to assure you that you will carry with you on your return to private practice the Government's appreciation of the high character of public service you have rendered in your important post, and my personal best wishes for your success and happiness."

House Bill Proposes Statue to Cleveland

A Brooklyn Representative yesterday sponsored a bill to erect a statue to Grover Cleveland, a native of New Jersey and twice President of the United States.

Representative Celler (Democrat), of New York, introduced a bill authorizing the Fine Arts Commission to find a suitable site for the monument, which must then be approved by the Joint Library Committee.

Although the city and the Capitol are full of statues, Celler said, there is none to the distinguished Democratic statesman.

Hull Delivers Severe Attack On Nationalism

Statement to Senators Seen as Move for World Parley.

Secretary of State Cordell Hull yesterday proposed that the United States adopt an "international outlook," joining with other nations of the world in encouraging trade agreements and lowering tariff barriers.

The third member of the President's Cabinet to lay world "recovery" proposals before the Senate Agriculture Committee, Hull's statement was interpreted as inviting an international economic conference, with this country taking the initiative. There was no White House comment.

Seeking foreign outlets for domestic commodities, the committee also heard suggestions from Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau, Undersecretary of Agriculture Tugwell, and Olin Johnson, AAA cotton pool manager. Secretary of Commerce Roper Wednesday proposed an international trade council to the committee, while Secretary of Agriculture Wallace submitted statistical data.

Sees "Economic Suicide."

"What the world needs more than anything else," said Hull, "is an education in internationalism. The world at present is committing economic suicide by its nationalistic policies."

Hull added, however, that the United States should take no step in lowering tariffs "until the other nations have awakened and are ready to follow our step."

Later Johnson remarked he "could not help noting the paradox of this Nation rejecting the policy of international concourse by its rejection of the resolution authorizing participation in the activities of the World Court, and then, the following day, seriously undertaking to explore the possibilities of increased international commerce and trade relations."

Johnson was interrupted by Senator Wheeler (Democrat), Montana, who said there was "difference between trading with other nations and entering a political alliance with them." Senator Smith (Democrat), South Carolina, who, like Wheeler, voted against the World Court, remarked that he "might trade with a man and still not accept him on a basis of equality."

When Morgenthau took the stand, Chairman Smith asked members not to question him on matters of policy, because of the gold clause case now pending before the Supreme Court.

Questioned on Silver.

Nevertheless, Senator Thomas (Democrat), Oklahoma, tried to draw out the Treasury chief on silver. Morgenthau promised to prepare an answer to a question by Thomas on the likely trade boosting effect of increased silver prices.

Secretary Morgenthau said there has been a decline in trade of gold bloc nations, and a marked increase among nations not adhering to the gold standard. Submitting foregin trade statistics, he said this country's favorable trade balance has more than doubled in the last year.

Pointing out that world consumption of American cotton is declining with rising prices, Tugwell said a world business recovery will be needed before the world can again consume a full supply of cotton at satisfactory prices.

Hull told the committee "it is unfortunate that our country and others have been swallowed up by extreme nationalism that can see no further than the toes."

"Clutches of Minorities"

He declared the world has been in the "clutches of the minorities" and their leadership has led only to "depressions and despair."

Thomas asked him what he meant.

"I mean," Hull retorted, "that when I was in the House a few people could send in some telegrams and I would jump as though I was shot at."

Discussing his projected ironing out of trade barriers, Hull said:

"We can see signs of light breaking here and there, but most nations which are highly in favor of our program are not sure, however, of our sincerity and intentions. We can not get rid of our surpluses until we bring about friendliness among the nations."

Roosevelt Assured Aid Of Investment Bankers

John M. Hancock and Ralph T. Crane, New York industrial bankers, called on President Roosevelt yesterday to assure him of the cooperation of the Investment Bankers Association in opening up the capital market.

Mr. Hancock, a partner in Lehman Brothers, is chairman of a committee of seven named by the association to cooperate with the various Federal agencies. Other members are:

Charles S. Cheston, Philadelphia; B. Howard Griswold, Baltimore; Roy C. Osgood, Chicago; Sidney J. Weinberg, New York; Dean Witter, San Francisco, and Orrin G. Wood, Baltimore.

Police Charge Two With Race Gambling

Two men were arrested and charged with operating a lottery yesterday when police raided a combination barber shop and pool room in the 2000 block of Fourteenth street northwest.

The prisoners registered as Joseph Coffren, 40, of the 1900 block of Sixteenth street northwest, and Maurice McDonald, 40, of the 1900 block of Eighteenth street northwest. The officers confiscated a number of alleged race-horse slips and books in which records of betting were said to have been kept.

New Numbers Racket Traced In Washington

gan harassing the place, has there been any sign of activity there.

That, however, doesn't mean that Jimmy himself is inactive, according to the police. They have information that he still is the "big shot" of the numbers racket hereabouts and that his headquarters is located off the Defense highway in Prince Georges County, Md.

Out of D. C. Jurisdiction.

This being the case, the Washington police can't touch him, nor, until an antinumbers law is passed by Congress, can they do much to the runners, who swarm through the city collecting thousands of dollars in bets each day.

In other cities attempts to organize the numbers racket invariably have ended in bloodshed. It was so in New York, Atlantic City and Philadelphia. In Philadelphia what was known as the "big mob" decided to take over all the play. Before it succeeded, 30 persons were murdered, including a Negro evangelist whose only misdeed was to inveigh against the numbers game.

The new numbers tickets are different in more ways than just appearance. For one thing, they sell for 25 and 50 cents, whereas in the past a bettor might wager as low as a cent.

Resemble Lottery.

They are different, too, in the sense that they are more nearly like a lottery. The bettor doesn't specify the number he wants; he takes the number that is given him.

As it goes from the runner to the bettor, the ticket is folded and the edges sewn together. Unless the thread is pulled and the ticket unfolded, it is impossible to see the printed number, even with the aid of a powerful light.

Until recently, numbers operators have been paying off on a combination of numbers based on returns from the first three races at a designated race track. Now they have gone back—or, at least, the designer of the new numbers ticket has gone back—to the daily balance in the Treasury. The balance was the basis for the pay-off in the beginning of the numbers racket. Race returns were used when newspapers stopped printing Treasury figures. Now certain newspapers are again printing these figures.

Gamble Runs for Five Days.

But the most startling feature about the new ticket is that, instead of being a gamble for one day, it runs over a period of five days. In other words, the bettor, having paid 25 or 50 cents for a ticket, has five chances to win.

On its face, this seems far more sporting than under the old system. However, there is a catch in it—as might be expected.

Heretofore the winning number has been a combination of three figures. That gave the bettor one chance in 999 to win.

Now, however, the winning number is a combination of five figures, and the bettor's chances are only one in 99,999.

Inquiry Hears Blanton Today; House Backs Drive on Crime

Commissioners and our Metropolitan Police Department should devise some system that will definitely determine what officers and men on the force are granting protection to violators of the law, not only with respect to gambling, but as to all violations, and remove such offenders immediately."

Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, and Inspector L. I. H. Edwards, assistant superintendent of police, have been told to be ready to follow Representative Blanton, who asked for 10 minutes. Maj. Brown partially completed his testimony.

Given Full Authority.

The investigating committee is cloaked with the full authority of the House under provisions of a resolution approved by the House Rules Committee yesterday. The resolution empowers the committee to subpena witnesses and records, put witnesses under oath, and to sit while the House is in session.

Announcement of the Rules Committee approval was made by its chairman, Representative John J. O'Connor (Democrat), of New York, after the committee had heard Representative Mary T. Norton (Democrat), of New Jersey, chairman of the House District Committee, and Representative Randolph, chairman of the Crime sub-committee.

They agreed to a modification of the language of the authorizing resolution involving the courts. The investigation may not go into questions involving matters within judicial discretion, under the new language. This restriction, for example, would prevent the committee from questioning Judge Fay L. Bentley, of the Juvenile Court, about her recent decision sending two 15-year-old boys to the reform school for six years. The same restriction would apply to other judges and their rulings, but it does not, it was said, prevent the committee from going thoroughly into the operations of the court machinery and seeking reforms.

Lehlbach Backs Courts.

Representative Frederick Lehlbach (Republican), of New Jersey, launched the fight against the committee going into questions involving judicial discretion. He could not understand, he said, why the committee would want to inquire into a decision which would send boys to a "parental home." Investigation of hte courts by the committee might easily be misinterpreted. Representative Byron B. Harlan (Democrat), of Ohio, asserted.

Representative O'Connor agreed with Mrs. Norton and Mr. Randolph that Congress should get all information it could about crime and law enforcement in the District, Washington, as the National Capital, should be made a model and take the lead in law enforcement, Mr. O'Connor said. Representative Adolph Sabath (Democrat), of Illinois, said he believed gambling was responsible for some of the crime in the District and urged a thorough investigation of gambling.

Increase of the District police force was essential, Representative Howard Smith (Democrat), of Virginia, said. That, Mr. Smith said, would be one of the greatest deterrents to crime. She agreed with him, Mrs. Norton said, and Mr. Randolph added his agreement.

Action on the resolution is to be taken by the House next week, Mr. O'Connor said. Meanwhile, the Crime Committee will seek approval of the Audit Committee for a special appropriation for its work. Representative Randolph said he believed $1,500 would be asked although the sub-committee has been authorized by the full committee to ask up to $5,000.

peaceful purposes, granting Russia and China the right to have not more than 15 soldiers along each kilometer of the Chinese Eastern Railway.

(The Soviet has virtually completed negotiating with Japan arrangements whereby her interest in the Chinese Eastern Railway, vital communications artery running through Manchuria, will be sold to Manchukuo for approximately $50,000,000.)

Although the Soviet was entitled to keep 25,000 guards in Manchuria, he said, all forces were withdrawn shortly after the Bolshevist revolution.

Japan Already Knew Of Big Soviet Army

Tokyo, Jan. 31 (AP).—Japan already knew Soviet Russia has tremendously increased her army in the past four years, high officials of the war office said today in commenting on an announcement at Moscow that the red army now numbers 940,000 men.

The spokesmen pointed to the statement of Gen. Senjuro Hayashi, minister of war, yesterday, that the Japanese army is equipped to cope with any eventualities.

Reports from Hsinking, capital of Manchukuo, said the Japanese general headquarters announced that its punitive force there had ejected virtually all Mongols from the disputed Manchu-Mongol border area north of the Kalkha River after two days of fighting.

The fact that no Soviet forces were engaged in the Mongolian action was stressed. Japan regards Outer Mongolia as under Soviet domination, and Japanese military spokesmen charged Moscow with issuing reports that the Japanese had "invaded" Mongolia.

No invasion or permanent occupation of Mongolian territory is intended, war office spokesmen said.

the cost of each $25 to $45, or an annual bill of $750,000. This sum could be saved, he said, and would still permit the title companies to earn more than $2,750,000 annually.

As his last suggestion, Tompkins asked for $2,000 to compile a pamphlet on the incorporation laws of the District. He said every State in the Union officially published such a paper with the exception of the District.

"With these changes inaugurated the Nation's Capital will have a records office comparable to any in America, and in keeping with the needs of its citizens," the report concluded.

Debt Parleys Of U. S., Soviet Fail Suddenly

eastern European affairs, who were present when the Soviet envoy called.

In a formal statement Mr. Hull asserted that "in view of the present attitude of the Soviet government, I feel that we can not encourage the hope that any agreement is now possible." He added that "there seems to be scarcely any reason to doubt that the negotiations, which seemed so promising at the start, must now be regarded as having come to an end."

The Secretary explained that it remained for the board of trustees of the Export-Import Bank, created to help finance Soviet purchases here, to determine whether "there is any good reason for continuing the existence of the bank."

His Finality Causes Surprise.

The finality of Mr. Hull's words caused general surprise. Usually when diplomatic negotiations break down, the fact is disguised by announcements that further conversations will be held at some indefinite time. Mr. Hull, howeever, made no effort to disguise what had happened, and he placed the onus on the Soviets.

The Secretary contended that the American proposal represented "the limit to which we believed we could go without complete sacrifice of the interests of American claimants and without unduly pledging the credit of our Government for the purpose of facilitating trade between the United States and the Soviet Union."

He explained that this Government had offered to settle all its claims, with those of its nationals, against the Soviet Union and the Soviet claims against the United States, by acceptance of "a greatly reduced sum to be paid over a long period of years."

This reduced sum was to be paid "through the application of a rate of interest beyond the ordinary rate of interest on credits extended to the Soviet government with the financial assistance" of this Government, he explained.

Prepared to Make Loans.

"To facilitate the placing of orders in the United States by the Soviet government on a long-term credit basis," Mr. Hull continued, "the Government of the United States was prepared to make through the Export-Import Bank to American manufacturers requiring financial assistance in connection with the granting of credit on such orders, loans to a very large percentage of the credit granted."

Mr. Hull added that it was contemplated to make the length of such credits vary according to different categories of goods, and that this Government was not adverse to making special terms in exceptional cases at the President's discretion. The loans thus extended would constitute a revolving fund for the continuous maintenance of Soviet purchases here, he said.

The Secretary expressed regret at the Soviet rejection of this plan. He said he particularly regretted the end of the conversations because of sympathy with the desire of American manufacturers and farmers to find a market for their goods in Soviet Russia, and with the American claimants whose property was confiscated. But, nevertheless, he concluded, there is no reason to entertain any hope regarding future negotiations.

New Mooney Appeal To Be Filed Here Today

San Francisco, Jan. 31 (AP).—In a second appeal to the United States Supreme Court for a writ of habeas corpus to free Tom Mooney, his attorneys will argue again they have exhausted all appeal to the California Supreme Court.

George T. Davis, San Francisco attorney for Mooney, said today a petition for rehearing will be filed in Washington tomorrow, and that it will contain pronouncements of the high California tribunal stating it believes the prisoner is "without remedy" there. Mooney is serving a life sentence for the 1916 Preparedness Day bombing in San Francisco which cost ten lives.

Hauptmann Defense Parades Alibi Witnesses

3 More 'Saw' Bruno in Bronx Night of Crime

Reilly Forges First Link in Chain of Evidence Blaming Gang.

Flemington, N. J., Jan. 31 (AP).—The placid young Swedish carpenter, Elvert Carlstrom, returned to the witness stand for further cross-examination by Attorney General David T. Wilentz today on his story he saw Bruno Hauptmann in a Bronx bakery-lunchroom the night of the Lindbergh kidnaping.

Q. Now you testified yesterday you saw the defendant only once and that was on the night of March 1 1932, in the bakery?—A. Yes.

Q. And you testified you were up in the Bronx that night to see a young lady who lived near the bakery, a young lady of whom you were very fond?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see her?—A. I didn't.

Q. Oh, you didn't?—A. It was too late.

Q. But you said that was why you went up there that night?—A. Yes.

The witness told Wilentz he fixed the time that he went to the Bronx bakery by the subway clock. After visiting the bakery Carlstrom said he went to Brooklyn, about 1 a. m.

Q. What did you do there?

Carlstrom did not answer for a long time, and Wilentz asked if he understood the question.

Edward J. Reilly, chief of defense counsel, interposed, suggesting that the witness might feel that it might incriminate him.

"Will your answer incriminate you?" Wilentz asked.

"Yes," said Carlstrom, and an answer was not required.

Q. Tell me what time you left Brooklyn?—A. About 5 in the morning.

The bland witness said he finally got back to Dunellen at 9:30 a. m. He was employed as a caretaker at a house there.

Says Bruno Was Reading.

The attorney general then directed the witness to return to his account of seeing Hauptmann on the kidnap night. Carlstrom said the prisoner was reading a paper when he saw him in the bake shop, where Mrs. Hauptmann was counter girl and waitress.

Wilentz asked the witness to identify Arthur Larsen, with whom he boarded in the Bronx. Larsen arose from a chair near the prosecution table and Carlstrom said he remembered him.

Q. Arthur Larsen worked in Dunellen with you?—A. Yes.

Q. He stayed in that house with you?—A. No, he lived in the Bronx.

Q. But he didn't go home to the Bronx every day he worked?—A. No.

Q. He stayed in Dunellen at night?—A. Yes.

Q. Slept in the same house with you?—A. Yes.

Q. You never said a word about Larsen yesterday?—A. Because you never asked me.

Q. And you never said anything about Larsen staying there, sleeping there?—A. I occupied the house.

Wilentz began reading yesterday's record to show that Carlstrom testified he lived alone in the house in Dunellen.

Q. The truth is that you never left Dunellen on any week day night, except the week-end?—A. I never left on week-ends. I left the night of March 1.

Q. Don't you remember you and Larsen both slept in that house the night of March 1?—A. No, I don't.

Wilentz asked Carlstrom if he would believe it if the house owner, Christiansen, showed records to prove it.

"I don't think so," the witness said.

Objects to Use of Records.

Q. Mr. Christiansen came out to Dunellen to take possession of the house the end of March?—A. He came out in middle of April.

Q. Didn't Mr. Christiansen take you back to New York on April 2, 1932?—A. No.

Wilentz had Christiansen's book of records, but Reilly objected to having the witness refer to it.

Carlstrom asserted he "would believe my own testimony" rather than Christiansen's records.

Carlstrom said he did not recall seeing the pictures. If he did, he said, he did not recognize them as the man he saw in the bakery the kidnap night.

At one pause in the questioning Carlstrom glared at Arthur Larsen, the man who allegedly told the state he and Carlstrom slept in the same house in Dunellen on the kidnap night.

Wilentz ended his examination of Carlstrom and Reilly asked him about his duties at the Dunellen house.

The witness said it was his duty to live there and care for the fire.

Larsen, he said, came to paint the inside of the house. The painter came to the house some time after he arrived and remained about a month. Larsen, he said, lived in the house.

Carlstrom explained that when he ordered a meal in broken English at the bakery Hauptmann laughed at him. He said he "got a good look at him," then.

The witness told Reilly he was "in the company of women" between 1 a. m. and 5 a. m. after he left the bakery.

"Played Hookey on Birthday."

Wilentz illustrated in his chair how Hauptmann probably sat in the bakery that night. The witness agreed that he saw him over his shoulder.

Wilentz brought from the witness that he had left the Christiansen house unguarded that night.

"Playing hookey on your birthday?" Reilly asked. The witness nodded.

"You didn't play hookey on any other birthdays that year, did you?" asked Wilentz.

The by-play between counsel ceased and Carlstrom was excused. Louis Kiss, a bald cadaverous-looking man, was the next defense witness called.

Q. Where do you live?—A. New York City.

Q. What's your occupation?—A. Silk painter.

Q. How long have you been in the United States?—A. Since 1922.

Q. Where do you come from originally?—A. Hungary.

Kiss told of his various places of employment in New York City.

Q. On March 1, 1932, were you in Fredericksen's restaurant in the Bronx?—A. Yes, but I find out it was Fredericksen's last Sunday.

Q. And when you read the article about the dog, what did you do?—A. I jumped up and I says to my wife—

Q. Never mind what you said to your wife. It was about the article in the paper?—A. Yes.

He then related how he notified Reilly.

In broken English, Kiss told of his appearance as a defense witness. He said he saw the story of the trial in the paper and went out last Sunday and called Reilly's Brooklyn office. He said he was told to report Monday at the office and on Tuesday he came to Flemington.

The witness told of getting lost during a subway trip to the Bronx March 1, 1932. He took a bus and finally got off to inquire his whereabouts.

"I found a man," he explained, "who told me where the subway station was."

Q. And where was that subway station?—A. 233d.

Stopped in Lunchroom.

"When I left the man I looked at my watch. It was 8:15. I saw this bakery lunchroom on my way to the station, so I dropped in for a cup of coffee," the silk artist went on.

Q. What time did you arrive in the bakery?—A. About 8:15.

Q. Who waited on you?—A. A lady.

Kiss told of a man entering with a police dog.

Q. What happened?—A. The lady came from serving the coffee and the man said in German to her "somebody wanted to take the dog away."

Q. You got a good look at the man?—A. Yes.

Q. The restaurant was well lighted?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see the man in the courtroom?—A. Yes.

Q. The defendant?—A. Yes.

Kiss, prompted by Reilly's questions, said he connected the man, the dog and the incident with Hauptmann after seeing his trial pictures in the newspapers.

The witness said he connected the bakery incident with Hauptmann also from the radio report of the kidnaping, March 1.

Reilly concluded with Kiss, bringing out that he was not connected with Hauptmann nor related to "anyone in the courtroom."

Attorney General Wilentz took the witness.

Q. So when you saw the dog you recognized the man?—A. I looked up and recognized the man.

Q. But because of the dog?—A. Yes, and because he spoke in German.

Q. When you saw the pictures in 1934 you didn't recall that was the man?—A. No. It didn't come to me.

Tells of Career in U. S.

Kiss recounted for Wilentz his career in the United States after arriving in 1922.

Wilentz called the witness' attention to direct testimony that exactly one week before the Lindbergh kidnaping he had taken his sick 7-year-old son to the hospital.

Q. Sure of that?—A. Positive.

Q. You couldn't be mistaken?—A. No.

Q. You'll stand on that statement?—A. Positive.

Wilentz asked him details on the hospitalization of his boy on February 22, 1932, the name of the doctor and the departure from his home.

Wilentz read Kiss his previous testimony that he took his boy to the hospital "exactly one week" before the kidnaping.

"One week exactly is the 29th of February," Wilentz said to the witness.

Kiss told of making "rum" from alcohol and flavoring. He said he was taking two pints to a friend in the Bronx when he got lost the night of March 1.

Q. Did you give this rum you made to friends just as a charity? A. Oh, no; no, they paid.

Q. How much did you sell it for? A. $1.25 a pint.

Q. Well this rum making was a business you never told us about before.—A. I made it for mine self.

Q. And you sold it, too?—A. Just to mine friends.

Q. Didn't you know it was against the law to make rum in 1932?

The witness shrugged.

The delivery of rum was about 9 p. m., Kiss said, after leaving the restaurant.

Kiss said he had not been drinking his "rum" that night.

"I drink rum in the morning," he explained. "Sometimes wine, sometimes beer in the evening."

Memory Is Hazy.

Kiss' memory became hazy as Wilentz pursued the rum-sale questions. The witness said he could not recall whether the delivery of the two pints was the first or second to the customer in the Bronx.

Wilentz asked him to describe the East Side route to the Bronx and he said he could not remember.

Kiss developed a complete lack of memory on rum deliveries before and after the bakery incident, March 1, 1932.

Wilentz asked a few questions on the return trip from the Bronx rum delivery and released the witness. He was excused and the noon recess was called at 12:27 p. m.

The afternoon session got under way at 1:46 p. m.

The defense called as its first witness of the afternoon session Augustus Van Henke.

Q. Where do you live?—A. East 88th, New York City.

Q. Where did you live in March, 1932?—A. 1463 Vyse avenue, Bronx.

He said he was engaged in the restaurant business.

Van Henke said he owned a police dog for two years before 1932 and lost it.

Q. Do you remember March 1, 1932, being in the neighborhood of a gasoline station on Boston Post road, the Bronx?—A. Yes.

The witness said he came from New Rochelle that night about 7:30 and stopped in the station, which he said was near Dyer street.

The witness said when he reached a gas station, he noticed a dog. He told how he got out of his car and followed the dog, and some distance away he encountered a man.

"I went up to him and said 'Is that your dog?' and he said, 'No, that dog belongs to the baker.' Then I said to him, 'If that is my dog, I would have you arrested,'" he related.

"Talked With Hauptmann."

Q. Do you see that man in the courtroom?—A. Yes. That man there (pointing to Hauptmann).

Wilentz objected to Reilly's proposal that Hauptmann stand up.

Von Henke told of discussing the dog with the man.

Q. Are you sure it was Hauptmann?—A. Yes. That man there.

The witness said Hauptmann gave him his name and information about the baker.

Q. As a matter of fact you did subsequently recover your lost dog? A. Yes, on March 4.

Q. How do you fix that night as March 1, 1932?—A. That was the day everybody knows the Lindbergh baby was kidnaped. I came home from the gas station at 9 o'clock, had my dinner and went out on the street and a lot of people are saying the Lindbergh baby was kidnaped.

Q. What time would you say?—A. About 10 or 11 o'clock.

Van Henke explained at Reilly's instigation that he wrote James M. Fawcett, Hauptmann's first counsel, about the incident, which he said occurred about 8 p. m.

Wilentz began the cross-examination.

Q. Who is August Wunstorf?—A. That's me.

Q. Why did you use that name?—A. On account of family trouble.

Q. When did you use it?—A. When I was in saloon business.

Q. When was that?—A. Before prohibition. Then I made it a restaurant.

Q. It was a speakeasy?—A. I don't know.

Q. You ran it, I didn't.—A. It had open doors.

Q. An open speakeasy?—A. I don't know.

Q. You made a horse race book there?—A. No.

Q. You know Walter Goodwin. What was his connection with your place?—A. He made a book.

Admits Place Was Raided.

Q. How many times was your place raided?—A. A couple of times.

Q. How many is that?—A. Two or three.

Q. So you were selling liquor and had a place where men were operating a racing handbook?—A. I threw him out a couple of times.

Q. How many years was Mr. Goodwin there?—A. I don't know.

Van Henke said he moved from his Bronx establishment to Lenox avenue.

Q. Another speakeasy?—A. You call it a speak, I call it a restaurant.

Q. Didn't you operate a bed house at Lenox avenue?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was it a neighborhood patronized by colored people and white people?—A. No. White people.

Q. What was on the second floor?—A. I don't know.

Wilentz, shouting, asked if the witness did not operate the second floor.

Van Henke, leaning forward and staring straight at him, said:

"I did not."

Q. You had a dog that was stolen?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you report it to the police?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you have a dog license?—A. Yes.

Wilentz brought out that the witness had not reported the dog's loss to his neighborhood police station, or at any other police station. He said he went direct to the dog pound to see if his dog had been found.

Q. How long was that before you saw the defendant with the dog?—A. About four days, I think.

The witness said he had not owned an automobile since January, 1933. Wilentz ended his questions and Reilly asked him to spell the names he used.

He said he had "no convictions on his name."

Wilentz brought from the witness that he obtained his automobile license as "Van Henke," although his real name was Warhenke. The man said further that he applied for relief under both names.

He was excused.

Young Laborer Called.

The next defense witness was Lou Harding, of Trenton, a young laborer.

Harding said he was working as a laborer for the Princeton Social Service in February, 1932, improving sidewalks.

March 1, 1932, he said he saw a car there between 2 and 3:30 p. m. Two men in the car asked the way to the Lindbergh estate.

Q. Did you look in the car?—A. I see a ladder in the car and a brown pasteboard box about 3 feet long.

Q. Neither man was this defendant?—A. No sir.

Q. Describe the car, please?—A. A dark blue suburban car.

Q. What license plates did it have?—A. New Jersey plates.

Q. What do you mean by a suburban car?—A. A car with several seats in it. All the back seats had been taken out. The ladder was on the floor of the car and the cardboard box was on top of it.

Q. Where were the two men?—A. In the front seat of the car.

Harding said he was questioned by the police at the Lindbergh estate, where he again saw the ladder.

The witness was asked to identify the kidnap ladder, but it was not in court and a delay followed while it was being brought.

"It was something about like that," said Harding, after examining the ladder, when it was brought in.

Harding said the State had not called him as a witness and he had written the defense about the incident. Reilly completed his questioning.

Wilentz took the witness for cross-examination, and asked him what name he was born under.

The surprise witness said he was "registered" under the name Luther Harding. He said he was born in Lumberton, N. C., where his father, Cordary Harding, now lives.

The witness said he told his story to the police at the estate—"I guess it was Col. Schwarzkopf."

Q. Do you know Col. Schwarzkopf?—A. No.

Q. Why do you say you talked to him then?—A. I think it was. I talked to Col. Lindbergh, too.

Wilentz began a long series of questions on Harding's activities and employment in Princeton and Trenton.

Admits Convictions.

Q. Have you ever been convicted of crime?—A. Yes; a couple of times.

Q. How about the second time?

"I object," said Reilly, and the question was withdrawn.

Q. What were you convicted of?—A. Assault and battery.

Q. On a woman?—A. No.

Q. Were you convicted the second time?—A. I was convicted of assault and battery; yes, sir.

Harding said he worked most of 1929 and 1930, except for "60 or 30 days."

Wilentz pressed for an answer on where he was then.

Harding said he had spent time in Rahway Reformatory.

Harding was allowed to look about the courtroom and stepped down to point at Sergt. W. B. Kelly seated back of the prosecution table as "one of the guys" who questioned him at the estate.

Q. Don't you know Sergt. Kelly

SAID COLONEL PAUL JONES:

"A fire, a book, and thou beside me—"

TO COLONEL PAUL JONES, no evening was happier than one spent with these three old friends: a crackling fire, a well-loved book, and a drink made with the mellow whiskey that bore his name . . . Paul Jones Whiskey!

Tonight, as you draw your own easy chair before the fire, let this namesake and comrade of the old Colonel join the circle. One sip of its full-flavored richness will tell you that here is a real old-fashioned American whiskey.

And it is! The Paul Jones of today is made by the direct descendants of the old Colonel. And it's made the way he made it—by the slow, costly old-fashioned method.

An All-American Whiskey

Paul Jones is a blend of straight whiskies. Every drop has the richness that comes from Kentucky and Maryland limestone water. Yet Paul Jones is reasonably priced.

In your club, restaurant or hotel, ask that your drinks be mixed with Paul Jones Whiskey. Instantly you'll notice the difference in bouquet, in flavor and smoothness. And, whether you ask for Paul Jones in mixed drinks or at your liquor store, insist that you get it.

3 More 'Saw' Bruno on Night Of Crime, Claim

Reilly Forges First Link in Chain of Evidence Blaming Gang.

didn't work on the Lindbergh kidnaping?—A. I saw him.

Wilentz drew from the witness that he had pleaded "no defense" to a statutory charge involving a woman and had received a sentence.

Wilentz drew from the witness he served a sentence in the State reformatory at Rahway, N. J., in 1931, and two terms in the Mercer County Workhouse, one of 30 days last year.

The witness described the "blue suburban car" he alleged he saw on March 1. The description was of a station wagon type of car.

Speaking about the ladder, Harding said:

"I just can't remember what kind of ladder it was. It was just a ladder."

Q. You say you shook hands with Col. Lindbergh?—A. Yes, he shook hands with me.

Q. He asked permission to shake hands with you?—A. He said he was Col. Lindbergh, and thanked me for my help.

Wilentz finished his questions.

Reilly, opening the redirect, asked Harding if the ladder was the only one he saw on March 1, 1932, in a station wagon?

"Yes."

He asked if the two men in that station wagon had been the only ones that day who asked directions to the Lindbergh estate. Harding again answered in the affirmative.

He was then excused.

Reilly called to the stand the defense's first handwriting expert, John M. Trendley, of East St. Louis, Ill., to attack the prosecution testimony that Hauptmann wrote the ransom notes.

Trendley told his qualifications, giving a short list of murder cases in which he has testified. He said he had worked in more than 380 cases.

After Trendley had recited his qualifications, Reilly announced, "I understand the State does not concede the qualifications of the witness."

Imitator of Handwritings.

Lanigan rose to his feet.

Q. You are an imitator of handwritings, are you not?—A. Yes.

Q. You claim you can speedily imitate a signature?—A. No, not speedily always. Sometimes it takes a long time.

Q. You claim to be able to produce spurious writing to deceive a witness?—A. Sometimes I have.

Lanigan referred to one New York case.

Q. After your testimony, did not the courts of New York set aside that will as a forgery?—A. Yes.

Lanigan read questions from another case in which Trendley was set forth as an efficient imitator of handwriting.

Q. Now you've been frequently mistaken, haven't you?—A. Yes, I don't claim to be an authority over everybody.

Lanigan continued to read transcript testimony from other cases. Two different opinions were given by Trendley, the reading disclosed, in the same case.

Trendley agreed it was true.

Trendley said in another case he changed his testimony after a noon recess, because of similarity between the hand of a husband and his wife.

Lanigan brought out from the transcript of the "Olmer" case that the defense expert had the signatures in the case for six months before the case was called and yet changed his testimony as to the author of the signatures after testifying to the results of the six-month examination.

The assistant attorney general then read parts of the transcript in the Hugh W. Thomason-Pikes Peak letters case in the circuit court of the City of St. Louis in 1932.

Here again the transcript showed the expert had changed his testimony during the case.

Lanigan, still reading case records, brought out that Trendley said he made a "cursory" examinatfon at one trial and sought to revise his testimony.

"Curbstone" Opinions.

Trendley said he had given "curbstone" opinions in the case in question.

Q. Are your opinions "curbstone and cursory?"—A. No. He handed them up to me and I told him they were "curbstone."

Lanigan brought Trendley's attention to this answer to a query in one of his prior cases:

"Well, I have never made any attempt to examine them. I took them from the general appearance and pictorial effect. I think I answered a good many of them without any deliberation."

Trendley sat resting chin on palm while the attorney read his alleged replies in other cases, apparently confirming them.

"All the substance of what you have been talking for an hour was just that one case," Trendley volunteered near the end of Lanigan's recital.

"That's your explanation, is it," Lanigan observed.

In the Patrick Rice case, Trendley said he prepared five false signatures "for the purpose of testing the ability" of experts on the opposite side of a case.

Admitted as Expert.

Reilly interposed, citing the "large amount" of money and "large number" of witnesses the State was able to bring to the trial.

The defense came "penniless" Reilly said, implying that difficulty had risen in obtaining experts for Hauptmann and loss of Trendley would be a serious handicap.

Justice Treacherd questioned Trendley on his training and experience.

"The mere fact that he gave 'curbstone' opinions which he later corrected," the justice said, "should not disqualify him. That would merely affect the value of his testimony. I think you may proceed, Mr. Reilly."

Admitted as an expert, Trendley told of examining photographs of the ransom notes and of the exhibits produced by the State's experts.

Reilly then asked that an adjournment be taken, because of the time required to erect Trendley's charts.

The adjournment was ordered at 4:22 p. m. and Reilly arranged to have the charts in place when court convened in the morning.

Bruno Defense Forges Gang Link

Three Witnesses Swear Hauptmann Was in the Bronx.

he, too, saw a man driving in a car with a ladder in it. That man, he said, was Hauptmann.

Harding, then, was the witness Reilly had promised to produce. The one who would deliver the first blow for the contention of the defense that Hauptmann is innocent and that a gang committed the crime.

The credibility of a convict always is under suspician in court, and that is the line of attack that Attorney General David T. Wilentz took when he got up to cross-examine.

"You have been convicted of a crime. When was it?"

"In 1931."

"What was the charge?"

"Assault and battery."

"Where did you go?"

"To Rahway Reformatory."

"Weren't you convicted of criminal attack?"

"My lawyer told me to plead non vult."

That means that no plea was offered; that the defendant put himself in the hands of the court for better or worse.

"Where were you sent?"

"To the Mercer County Workhouse for 43 days."

"That's all," said Wilentz.

Louis Kiss got a more extended cross-examination after he had told his story. His was a tale shot through with laughter and good humor. All Louis Kiss ever did that was against the law, he said, was to make rum out of alcohol and flavoring and peddle it to his friends for $1.25 a pint. On the evening of March 1, 1932, he made up a batch of rum ("it takes me about 10 minutes to do the mixing") and got on a subway to go to the home of his friend, Leo Singer, in the Bronx.

Kiss, a shriveled little Hungarian with one streak of hair across his shining pate, struggled with the English language while Reilly examined him.

"Tell us what happened on the night of March 1, 1932," Reilly suggested.

Stopped in Lunchroom.

"I was supposed to bring two pints of liquor to a friend," Kiss said. "I take the wrong Bronx subway train and landed on the West Side. I take a street car across town. Then I took a bus and I saw a lot of empty, one-family houses. I got off the bus and looked at my watch. It was 8:15. I saw a bakery and lunchroom. I went in for a cup of coffee.

"You say it was 8:15 at night?"

"Yes."

"Who waited on you in the bakery?"

"A lady."

"All right, tell us what happened then."

"I was drinking my coffee when a dog run in. A man was with the dog. This man he looks at the woman and says something to her in German which means 'somebody wanted to take this dog away from me.' The woman said something to the man in German. I paid for my coffee, looked at the man and walked out."

So once more everybody in the courtroom was carried back to that little bakery in the Bronx owned by Christian Frederickson, where Anna Hauptmann worked as a waitress for $18 a week. It is getting to be a famous bakery by now. Earlier today a young Swede, Elbert Carlstrom, reiterated that Hauptmann was sitting in that bakery, laughing at him because he couldn't speak good English, on the night of March 1, 1932.

And now the court was hearing how a quirk of fate and a wrong subway train had turned Louis Kiss' steps toward that same bakery at the same fateful hour.

Reilly walked over to the witness chair and stood close to Kiss.

"Do you see the man in this courtroom who came into the bakery that night with the dog?" he asked.

"Yes."

"All right, where is he?'

Kiss got up out of the witness chair and stretched out a lean and shaking arm, with his forefinger pointing at the forehead of Hauptmann. The prisoner again made that quick motion, getting half-way out of his chair, as if eager to be sure that Kiss was pointing to the right man.

"You are not related to Hauptmann, are you?" Reilly asked.

"No."

"And you came here only because you wanted to see justice done?"

"That's right."

"Your witness," said Reilly to Wilentz.

Wilentz engaged in a little pleasantry before getting down to the one point he wanted to make against Kiss.

"You say you made rum and sold it?"

"Yes, I sell it."

"You didn't sample any of it that night before you started out to Leo Singer's house, did you?"

"No, no, I don't drink rum at night."

"When do you drink it?"

"In the morning."

"What do you drink at night?"

"Wine."

"Make that yourself, too?"

"Not yet."

Sent Son to Hospital.

Then Wilentz wanted to know how Kiss could remember this trip after almost three years. Kiss said he had sent his son to the hospital exactly a week before the kidnaping to be treated for a kidney ailment.

"Exactly a week before the kidnaping?" Wilentz asked.

"Yes."

"What day was that?"

Associated Press Wirephoto.

Louis Kiss, silk painter, who testified he saw Bruno Hauptmann in the Bronx the night of the kidnaping.

"February 22—Washington's birthday."

Wilentz tore into him.

"Don't you know that if you sent your son to the hospital exactly a week before the kidnaping, then the kidnaping would have occurred on February 29 instead of March 1?"

Kiss tried to explain that by saying that it was close to midnight when he sent his son to the hospital, and that it might have been the early morning of February 23 instead of February 22.

Wilentz announced after court adjourned for the day that he intends to make much of this alleged discrepancy in Kiss' testimony and try to prove that he wasn't in Fredericksen's bakery on the night of March 1, but, instead, on the night of February 29.

August Van Henke wasn't in that cozy little circle in Frederickson's bakery on the all-important night. He said he was outside on the sidewalk. Somebody had stolen Van Henke's police dog the week before, he said, and so he was considerably excited when he saw a man walking down the street with a police dog on a leash.

"I ran up to the man," Van Henke testified. "And I said 'is that my police dog you've got there?' He said, 'No this dog belongs to the baker down the street.' I called the dog Rex, which was my dog's name, but the dog doesn't pay any attention to me, so I saw it wasn't my dog. We talked a while and the man told me his name."

"Gave Name as Hauptmann."

"What name did he give you?" Reilly asked leaning toward Van Henke.

"Hauptmann," replied the witness.

"And is that man in court?"

"Yes."

"Point him out to me."

Van Henke rose and pointed to Hauptmann. Once more the prisoner came half way out of his chair.

Wilentz whirled toward Hauptmann and shouted:

"You sit down and let him identify you if he can."

Once more Wilentz got up to cross-examine.

"You ran a speakeasy during prohibition, didn't you?"

"Yes, I did."

"How many times were you raided?"

"A couple of times, I guess."

"Didn't you also run a place where white and colored people mingled?"

Van Henke's eyes blazed with anger.

"That's a liar; that's a liar," he shouted.

Wilentz is getting accustomed to having people shout "liar" at him from the witness chair by now. He smiled and went on:

"Who is August Bunstorff?"

"I put money in that name."

"Never mind that, have you used that name?"

"Yes, when I wanted to have some fun."

Admits Using Aliases.

"You used it when you were in trouble with your relatives, didn't you?"

"Yes."

"Who is August Marhenke?"

"That is me."

"So you are August van Henke, August Bunstorff and August Marhenke?"

"Yes."

"That's all," Wilentz shouted.

So Hauptmann's contention that he was in the Bronx rests on four pillars tonight.

On the testimony of his wife that he called for her at the bakery shortly after 7 p. m. of March 1, 1932, and took her home at 9:30 p. m.

On the testimony of Louis Kiss, who drifted into the bakery while out on a liquor peddling errand.

On the testimony of Elbert Carlstrom, who went into the bakery and got mad because Hauptmann, who doesn't speak such good English himself, laughed at his Swedish accent.

On August Van Henke, who thought he was about to recover his stolen police dog at the very moment when someone was placing a ladder against the wall of the Lindbergh home and carrying a baby out of its crib.

Against those witnesses the State has pitted:

Amandus Hochmuth, who says he saw Hauptmann, with a ladder in his car, near Lindbergh lane at noon on the day of the kidnaping.

Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, who testified Hauptmann's was the voice he heard in St. Raymond's Cemetery the night the ransom was paid.

Dr. John F. Condon, who testified he paid the ransom to Hauptmann and conducted preliminary negotiations with him in Woodlawn Cemetery.

Joseph Perrone, a taxicab driver, who swore Hauptman paid him $1 to carry a note to Condon's home.

Cecile Barr, who says Hauptmann handed her a $5 ransom bill in payment for a theater ticket.

What the State case lacks is somebody who can say he saw Hauptmann climb that ladder and carry away the baby.

Now the defense is ready to proceed to other matters. It started late today when it summoned John M. Trendley, East St. Louis, Ill., handwriting expert, to the witness chair. He was examined as to his qualifications as an expert and accepted. Tomorrow he is expected to testify that Hauptmann wrote none of the 14 ransom notes that were sent out by the kidnaper. Other defense experts will follow him with similar testimony.

Then the jury can have the knotty problem of whether these men are correct or whether the eight experts, summoned by the State to swear that Hauptmann wrote all the notes, have interpreted the evidence accurately.

Defense counsel complained tonight that their witnesses were being intimidated. New York and New Jersey police sat at the prosecution table all day today, jotting down notes while Kiss, Van Henke and Harding testified. Before the men could get off the stand, detectives were scurrying through two States checking the records and statements of the witnesses.

General Wilentz," he said. "These witnesses have been approached by persons representing themselves as from the State of New Jersey, but they have no credentials.

"If I gave you the name of the witnesses I am going to put on tomorrow, you can bet they'd never get here."

and the Olds Motor Works in that city had been forced to close because of a strike. Eighty key employes walked out, throwing 8,000 men out of work. The strikers were said to be demanding more money and less work.

Reports of serious strike threats were discounted in Washington, where observers pointed out that recent plant elections indicated that the American Federation of Labor was represented by only a very small minority of the automobile workers.

Green Asks 30-Hour Week.

Meanwhile, William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, told the Senate Labor Committee that failure of NRA to achieve substantial employment gain had made a 30-hour-week law necessary. Senator Gerald P. Nye (Republican), North Dakota, joined in the statement that NRA has failed.

Referring to the hearing on labor provisions in codes, now being conducted by NRA, Nye said:

"The answer on the part of labor leaves no doubt in the mind of any one that the American worker is dissatisfied with conditions as they prevail and pessimistic that NRA will improve them.

"The answer of business, and particularly small businesses, has been one long and ineffective protest."

Nye called for an investigation of NRA "by an impartial body which will neither whitewash the subject nor bury its findings."

Assails Auto Makers.

Francis J. Dillon, A. F. of L. organizer in Detroit, told the Recovery Board that automobile manufacturers had "failed to keep faith" with the President. He said the Federation would never again advise workers to refrain from striking until the automobile makers recognize their employes' rights.

Among the automobile code provisions to which labor objects is the "merit clause" allowing employers to hire and fire without regard to membership in any labor union. Labor also is violently opposed to the Automobile Labor Board, headed by Dr. Leo Wolman. The board was organized last spring after federation unions had threatened a strike. Recently the federation withdrew from participation in the board's activities.

Chicago Gunmen Get $462 in School Raid

Chicago, Jan. 31 (AP).—Five gunmen raided the South Side Junior College today and fled with $462 in cash.

About 1,500 students in a public school and the adjoining Chicago Normal College knew nothing of the holdup. Professors John Cosgrove and Thomas Ernest, on duty in the cashier's office, were forced to surrender the money and were then slugged with a revolver butt because the amount was small.

the aid of this Government in stopping the attacks on Catholics. Several Catholic organizations last fall, as revealed at the time by The Post, demanded the recall of Ambassador Josephus Daniels because he allegedly made remarks indicating sympathy with the drive of Mexican officials to eliminate religious teaching in schools.

Senator David I. Walsh (Democrat), of Massachusetts, issued a statement urging favorable action on the Borah resolution as quickly as possible, pointing out that protests from religious, fraternal and interdenominational societies of all sects have indicated "an unwholesome condition affecting the cause of religion in Mexico, prohibiting the right to worship and a determination on the part of many Americans to have the true situation in Mexico disclosed."

Senator Borah, who was selected as a spokesman in the Senate for the protesting groups, contended in his resolution that the persecutions of Christians of all faiths now being practiced in Mexico "have aroused indignation and protest throughout the civilized world" and that American citizens of the Christian faith "have been outraged and reviled, their homes invaded, their civil rights abridged and their lives placed in jeopardy."

He asked the Senate to protest against the antireligious practices of the Mexican government and to assert that "it views with the gravest concern such ruthless persecution of helpless men and women" and that it "strongly condemns the cruelties and brutalities that have accompanied the campaign of the present Mexican government against the profession and practice of religious beliefs by our nationals of all religious faiths now domiciled in Mexico."

Senator Borah also proposed the Senate call on the Mexican government "in the name of humanity to cease denying fundamental and inalienable rights to those of our nationals who may be resident in Mexico regardless of religious convictions."

He proposed an appropriation of $10,000 to defray the costs of the inquiry which his resolution would direct the Foreign Relations Committee to undertake.

Mexico City, Jan. 31 (AP).—Rebel activity in nine of Mexico's 28 states was announced by the War Department today in connection with the trial of 18 prisoners accused of sedition in an alleged revolutionary movement.

The War Department attributed some of the rebel movements to followers of Gen. Antonio Villarreal, defeated presidential candidate in the last election, and to "fanatics." Anti-government leaders are recruiting forces and spreading subversive propaganda, the department added.

Army officials said Jose Vasoncelos, another defeated presidential candidate in an earlier election, has been "supported by the United States Senate" as leader of an attempted revolution.

Marine Guard Urged to Curb Camp Disorder

Grand Jury's Proposal for Virginia Transient Unit Given U. S. Court.

Richmond, Jan. 31 (AP).—A report that lawlessness at the Regional Emergency Relief Administration camp for transients at Fort Eustis, Va., has become so prevalent that a company of marines is needed there to preserve order was submitted by the grand jury in United States District Court here today.

The special report, submitted after the jury had completed its work on indictments, said that testimony before the jury had indicated conditions that demand suppression for the better security of residents of the country surrounding the Federal military reservation.

"A large number of violations of the laws of the United States and the State of Virginia are occurring," the report said, adding "It has come to the attention of the grand jury that such violations can not be properly prevented without additional assistance. It is the opinion of this grand jury, by unanimous vote, that some steps should be taken."

Report's Recommendation.

The report then recommends "that a company of soldiers or marines be stationed at the camp for guard duty."

Presiding Judge Luther B. Way instructed the clerk of the court to supply the district attorney with a copy of the report and to forward other copies to the proper officials of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration. He indicated that the court would take no immediate steps in the case.

The Fort Eustis rehabilitation camp was established as a unit separate from the several other camps in various parts of Virginia and was intended to draw men from a region embracing several neighboring States.

Purpose of Camp.

The men sent to this camp, according to the Relief Administration's plans, were to be encouraged to use their natural aptitudes in performing certain tasks or in learning new occupations, which would enable them to rehabilitate themselves in industry when the opportunity offered. Only those regarded as capable of such rehabilitation were to be sent to the camp, transients who were regarded as merely in need of temporary shelter being placed in the regular Virginia camps.

The December report of the VERA stated that the Fort Eustis camp had been designated as "Transient City," and that its enrollment on December 15 had grown to 1,556.

Later tonight, after talking to Paul Murphy, director of the camp, Smith said he had been informed that 14 cases dealing with lawlessness in that vicinity had been placed before the grand jury here and that he surmised these led to the grand jury's special report.

The cases, he said, did not involve lawlessness within the camp, but grew out of outside contacts with persons who had been selling bootleg liquor to the transients or buying Government-issued equipment from them. The prosecutions were instigated by Murphy in an effort to stop the law violations.

Church Weighs College Inquiry

Lutherans May Launch Study of Morals in Universities.

Roanoke, Va., Jan. 31 (AP).—Declaring that the Lutheran Church had lost thousands of members by not following the young people as college students, the research division of the board of education of the United Lutheran Church may launch a study of morals in American colleges and universities, Dr. Gould Wickey, executive secretary of the board, told the 106th annual convention of the Lutheran Synod of Virginia here today.

Dr. Wickey declared there was a considerable problem facing the church in placing seminary graduates, although the enrollment of Lutheran students in church institutions had shown a decrease in recent years. He said there was marked sentiment in favor of maintaining only one seminary on the Atlantic seaboard, that institution to be established in Washington.

A memorial service was held this afternoon for the Rev. Dr. J. P. Stirewalt and the Rev. B. W. Cronk, members of the synod who died during the past year. Memorial addresses were delivered by the Rev. C. K. Rhodes, of Madison, and the Rev. Dr. E. H. Copenhaver, of Marion.

The report of Harry E. Pugh, of Richmond, statistician, showed a net gain in membership in the synod during 1934 of more than 500, the membership reaching 27,477, compared with 26,968 in 1933.

Sims, Bank Official, In Jail at Richmond

Richmond, Va., Jan. 31 (AP).—J. Stuart Sims, former bookkeeper of the Broad street branch of the State-Planters Bank & Trust Co., indicted by a Federal grand jury yesterday on five counts charging him with embezzlement, surrendered at the United States marshal's office here today.

He was confined to jail on the basis of a bench warrent issued for him yesterday after the indictment had been returned. Sims said he had been working for more than three months in the CCC camp at Williamsburg and had returned to Richmond and surrendered as soon as he read today that he had been indicted. He will be brought into court tomorrow to plead to the charge.

Benjamin Ejected From Hearing

Benjamin, an avowed Communist and representative of the National Congress for Unemployment and Social Insurance, who refused to cease after the committee had listened to him for five minutes, the same amount of time allotted to other witnesses.

Benjamin shouted and struggled as he was led from the room by police after he heatedly refused a suggestion of Chairman Doughton for inclusion of his full statement in the record. He was questioned a few minutes in the Capitol Police Station and released.

He later charged the committee with employing "brutal police violence" to "impose" the Wagner-Lewis bill on the public.

Earlier, among other things, Benjamin told the committee:

"The policies of President Roosevelt are designed to safeguard the privileges of the wealthy. * * *

"This is a program of security for wealth and property. * * *

"We know why the Administratin entrusted this bill to you instead of the Labor Committee, where it would ordinarily go. We take it that you can be expected to discourage the presentation of opposition opinion."

Confers With Witte.

Following a conference with Edwin E. Witte, secretary of the President's Economic Security Committee, Senator Harry Flood Byrd (Democrat), Virginia, disclosed he will offer amendments tempering authority of the relief administrator to withhold State grants for old-age pensions.

Under the measure as now drawn Federal aid funds need not be distributed to States if the administrator disapproves of the pension systems. Both Byrd and Senator Connally (Democrat), Texas, yesterday pressed Witte on what the Virginian charged amounted to "coercion."

Senator Harrison (Democrat), Mississippi, committee chairman, was authorized to seek the reaction of State Governors on the measure. Later Byrd conferred with Witte, whose statistics on Virginia's aged he charged were "inaccurate."

Meanwhile, it was reported by an authoritative source, according to a copyrighted article by the Associated Press, that the Government has called a temporary halt in its drive to return the "unemployables" on its relief rolls to the care of the States. Although FERA officials said the goal of their drive was in sight, according to the Associated Press article it was indicated officially the aged, crippled and others unable to work who are still on the relief rolls would be permitted to remain there until after the President's social security program is enacted.

Smuggling Rumor Stirs Investigation

Pocomoke City, Md., Jan. 31 (Spl.).—Federal Immigration Authorities are investigating a rumor that a number of Chinese and a quantity of opium have been smuggled into the country by means of Upshurs Neck, a small peninsula in the central part of the Eastern Shore of Virginia.

Details of the smuggling are varying and vague, as the authorities refuse to speak, but trucks were supposed to have carried the smuggled men and goods to New York.

Norfolk, Va., Jan. 31 (AP).—Local immigration authorities, who said they suspect that Chinese have been smuggled into this country recently by way of the Virginia Eastern Shore, were unable today to throw any light on a report that investigation there had resulted in the arrest of a man suspected of being engaged in the smuggling.

Recently an investigation was conducted on the Eastern Shore in the belief that the 18 smuggled Chinese found last November at South Keansburg, N. J., had been brought ashore on the Virginia coast.

Liquor Blamed In Man's Death; One Is Arrested

Railroad Worker Stricken After Drinking; Still Owner Seized.

Hagerstown, Md., Jan. 31 (Spl.). An investigation into the cause of the sudden death today of Martin A. Morgan, 31, railroad section worker, after he had imbibed last night of moonshine liquor, was followed late today by the arrest of Oliver Crampton, 44, Halfway, Washington County, on charge of operating an unlicensed still and with the sale of untaxed liquor. In the meantime whisky which Mrs. Morgan told police her husband had been drinking before he retired last night and liquor seized in a raid upon Crampton's home have been turned over to a chemist for analysis, while an autopsy will be made on Morgan's body.

When arraigned before United States Commissioner D. Angle Wolfinger, Crampton pleaded guilty to a charge of possession of an unlicensed still, but not guilty to the charge of selling untaxed liquor. He was held under $1,500 bond for a hearing Saturday.

The raid upon Crampton's home by Federal agents and local officers, came after an all-day investigation on the suspicion of State's Attorney Martin L. Ingram that the liquor may have caused the death of Morgan, who, his wife said, was in perfect health when he retired last night.

James Clingan, companion of Morgan, who was made violently ill after drinking the same moonshine liquor as Morgan, gave authorities the information which led to the raid upon Crampton's home, where a 30-gallon still, 350 gallons of mash and 6 gallons of liquor were seized.

Morgan was found dead in bed this morning by his wife, who notified the authorities.

Mrs. George M. Ball Dies in Pennsylvania

Warrenton, Va., Jan. 31 (Spl.).—News has been received in Warrenton of the death of Mrs. George Meredith Ball, 79, at her home at Narberth, Pa. She was the widow of a retired official of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and the mother of Mrs. George C. Lawrence, of Warrenton, and Mrs. Hunter Brooke, jr., of Narberth, who has spent much time in Warrenton. Mrs. Ball also is survived by three sons. Interment was at Williamsport, Pa.

News also has been received of the death of Mrs. A. B. Lawrence, mother of Mrs. W. Wilson Drake, who has spent much time in Warrenton with her daughter. Mrs. Lawrence was a native of Long Island. She had been making her home in Baltimore with her daughter, Mrs. Norman Gardner, where her death occurred.

mate objection a reorganized I. C. C. to handle all transportation was made clear in his message. He asked Congress to consider the aviation report, the report of Transportation Coordinator Joseph B. Eastman the day before, and others to come—including one on ocean mail subsidies—as a single program.

Proposals of the Aviation Commission were contained in a bill introduced in the House by Representative Clarence F. Lea (Democrat), of California, member of the Interstate Commerce Committee.

Wants "World Leadership."

Beginning with an expression of policy that the United States should maintain a position of "world leadership" in aviation, the report outlines 102 specific recommendations. Highlights are:

Early inauguration of an experimental transatlantic airship service to meet the competition of the newest foreign ocean liners. First step would be construction by the Government, for charter to private interests, of one large dirigible.

Prompt construction for the Navy of a training airship to replace the Los Angeles, as recommended by the Navy General Board. Undeterred by airship catastrophies of the past, the report urges further research into the value of dirigibles.

Asks Airmail Fund.

Creation of an Air Commerce Commission (opposed by the President) with broad supervisory powers over civil aviation, subject to "merger" with another agency by Executive order.

Establishment of the airmail on a "strictly commercial basis," with payments to lines not to exceed income. In place of the present system of indirect subsidy, the report suggests $7,000,000 as an annual fund for direct financial aid.

Amendment of the airmail act to permit the I. C. C. to revise upward or downward existing airmail rates and to continue the contracts expiring March 1.

Adoption of the present Army and Navy program, calling for 1,910 Navy planes by 1941, 2,320 Army planes by 1938.

Competitive Bidding Hit.

In addition, the report recommends encouraging the sale of American aircraft abroad; proposes a new assistant secretaryship for aeronautics; advises transfer of the Weather Bureau from the Agriculture to the Commerce Department; and suggests a constitutional amendment giving the Federal Government exclusive control of all phases of civil aviation.

Taking note of criticisms against military aviation, the report finds them largely unjustified and exaggerated. Concerning procurement, the commission says that competitive bidding is not always desirable and recommends authorizing direct negotiation.

The commission is highly complimentary of American avitaion, declaring that the Nation's safety record far outshines that of other nations. From January 1, 1933, to December 31, 1934, 421,300,000 passenger miles were flown in the United States with 33 passenger fatalities. This is an average of 12,800,000 miles per death, which compares with 2,195,000 for Great Britain.

The aviation commission, headed by Clark Howell, sr., Atlanta publisher, heard 102 witnesses and traveled far and wide to prepare its report. Besides Howell, who journeyed to Europe, the members were Edward P. Warner, Albert J. Berres, Jerome C. Hunsaker, Franklin K. Lane, jr.

Ice Jam Imperils 2 Virginia Bridges

Fredericksburg, Va., Jan. 31 (AP). Although ice is piling up in the Rappahannock River at Fredericksburg just below the Virginia Electric and Power Co. dam for about a half mile, no immediate danger is seen until the ice begins to break up, and then none is foreseen in Fredericksburg.

Bridges crossing the Rappahannock at Port Royal and Tappahannock, however, may suffer, it was said tonight by veteran rivermen.

The Port Royal bridge may receive the hardest jolt from the ice should it begin to break up all at once, it was said.

There has been no transportation to Fredericksburg by water since the freeze began, the ice being five inches thick at this point.

Legion to Give Card Party.

The Charles F. Huntemann Post, No. 110, American Legion, of Mount Rainier, will hold a card party in the basement of the Mount Rainier firehouse, Thirty-fourth and Ash streets, tonight at 8 o'clock.

Text of Roosevelt Message

The text of President Roosevelt's aviation message to Congress follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am submitting herewith the report of the Federal Aviation Commission appointed by me last summer by direction of the Seventy-third Congress. The commission has made a diligent study of the broad subject of aviation conditions here and elsewhere and emphasizes the excellent American progress in this new form of transportation. The commission has also studied problems of national defense, of procurement policies and of the extension of air transport services. I invite your attention to these comprehensive surveys.

As I have suggested on many occasions, it becomes more and more apparent that the Government of the United States should bring about a consolidation of its methods of supervision over all forms of transportation. When the Interstate Commerce Commission was created in 1887 the railroad was practically the principal method of rapid interstate transportation. Since that time this monopoly of transportation enjoyed by the railroad, to a very important degree, has been limited by the development of the automobile and good interstate roads.

Water Routes a Factor.

Recently water transportation by lake, by river, by canal and by oceans has, largely through the construction of the Panama Canal and our inland waterways, definitely brought ships and shipping into the general interstate field. More recently still air transportation has become an element.

All of these developments have changed the general problem of transportation and the concern of the Government with them. A number of valuable reports have been prepared on these related questions. The report of the Federal Cobrdinator of Transportation has already been submitted to the Congress by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The report deals with the many problems relating to busses, trucks, water carriers and railroads.

Other reports of departmental committees on ocean mail subsidies have been completed. This present report on aviation is a similar source of information and advice concerning transportation by air. I earnestly suggest that the Congress consider these various reports together in the light of the necessity for the development of interrelated planning of our national transportation. At a later date I shall ask the Congress for general legislation centralizing the supervision of air and water and highway transportation with adjustments of our present methods of organization in order to meet new and additional responsibilities.

Air Mail Contracts.

There are detailed questions, however, that require early action. Our extended mail contracts with air lines expire on or about March 1 and existing legislation dealing with primary and secondary routes should be revised before that time.

The commission suggests that the Interstate Commerce Commission be given temporarily the power to lower or increase air mail rates as warranted in their judgment after full investigation. The purpose of this is to prevent the destruction of any efficiently operated part of the present system pending suitable consideration by the Congress of what permanent measures should be taken and what amendment, if any, the present general transportation policy of the Government should undergo.

I concur in this recommendation of the Federal Aviation Commission provided always that the grant of this duty to the Interstate Commerce Commission be subject to provisions against unreasonable profits by any private carrier. On account of the fact that an essential objective during this temporary period is to provide for the continuation of efficiently operated companies and to guard against their destruction, it is only fair to suggest that during this period any profits at all by such companies should be a secondary consideration. Government aid in this case is legitimate in order to save companies from disastrous loss but not in order to provide profits.

Against Air Commission.

The commission further recommends the creation of a temporary air commerce commission. In this recommendation I am unable to concur. I believe that we should avoid the multiplication of separate regal story agencies in the field of transportation. Therefore, in the interim before a permanent consolidation agency is created or designated over transportation as a whole, a division of the Interstate Commerce Commission can well serve the needs of air transportation.

In the granting of powers and duties by the Congress, orderly government calls for the administration of executive functions by those administrative departments or agencies which have functioned satisfactorily in the past and, on the other hand, calls for the vesting of judicial functions in agencies already accustomed to such powers. It is this principle that should be followed in all of the various aspects of transportation legislation.

Virginia Farmers Report 'Comeback' By Draft Horses

Harrisonburg, Va., Jan. 31 (Spl.). Rockingham farmers again are finding it is profitable to raise purebred draft horses.

H. W. Baker, of Cross Keys, whose faith in the horse has never been shaken by the tractor, has a farm upon which he raises purebred Percherons. He announced today that he has sold five for more than $1,400. Four of the animals went to the department of husbandry and dairying of North Carolina State College for breeding purposes.

"The demand now for strong work horses is greater than the supply," said Mr. Baker. "Good prices are being paid. For a while there was a slump, but the horse as a work animal on a farm is coming back."

Mais, Legenza Turn to Prayer As Death Nears

Richmond, Va., Jan. 31 (Spl.).—Robert Mais and Walter Legenza, who will enter the Virginia death chamber between 7 and 8 o'clock Saturday morning, finally have lost their immobility under the strain of waiting. The two sit in death row, according to guards, read their Bibles, pray and sing as the hour of the execution approaches.

When the Rev. R. V. Lancaster, prison chaplain, and Col. Fred W. Seiler, of the Salvation Army, visit them for an hour daily, both men join in hymns and prayer.

Each tells Col. Seiler that he's "sorry, always have been sorry when I did anything wrong." Mais, says his spiritual adviser, "simply was brought up in the wrong place, the wrong environment, with the wrong people."

The men, except for their religious activity, show no particular apprehension for the ordeal they are to face, prison officials said today. Their appetites are holding up and both are sleeping well.

The cells occupied by Mais and Legenza are side by side, but separated by heavy steel sheeting. The two, however, can converse by raising their voices, and have been remaining up until after midnight talking and reading aloud.

Mais, Legenza Deny Link With Burch Death

With little more than 24 hours to live, Robert Mais and Walter Legenza, condemned gangsters, from their death cells in the Richmond Penitentiary yesterday vigorously denied any connection with the murder of Angus H. Burch, of Colmar Manor, Md., last February 24.

Prince Georges County Police Sergt. Ralph Brown and Chief Deputy Sheriff William E. Clifton spent an hour interviewing the two men and Arthur (Butch) Misunas, another member of the notorious Tristate gang. Misunas is beginning a 35-year prison term.

All denied they knew anything of the hold-up and murder of the 52-year-old proprietor of a barbecue stand. Nor did the men give any information that might connect them with a series of Washington and Virginia hold-ups which occurred the same night, and which are believed to have been perpetrated by the Burch murderer.

The murder of Burch took place about a month before the hold-up and shooting fracas in Richmond for which Mais and Legenza were condemned to die and Misunas was sentenced to prison. Three men took part, according to witnesses, in the Colmar Manor shooting.

Post Office Wrecked By Mammoth Truck

Beckley, W. Va., Jan. 31 (Spl.).—A mammoth truck loaded with six automobiles wrecked the postoffice and store building early today at Glen Daniel. The big vehicle, en route to Concord, N. C., failed to round a curve and plowed into the building, crashing its walls, crumbling its counters and bringing down the roof.

Dr. George P. Daniel, county physician, postmaster and store proprietor, came from his home nearby and stood guard over the ruins until State police arrived. The officers exonerated Vanz O. Cress, driver of the truck, who said he was blinded by lights of an approaching car.

Winchester Boy Hurt In Coasting Accident

Winchester, Va., Jan. 31 (Spl.).—Harry Hanst, jr., young son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Hanst, was seriously injured last night in the first local coasting accident of the winter when his sled crashed into a barrier placed across the track while some boys were sweeping away loose snow.

Hanst received abdominal injuries and injuries to his left kidney, an examination at the local hospital revealed today. Richard Brown, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Brown, received lacerations to the fingers of one hand when his sled struck Hanst's an instant after the first mishap.

Polly Cary Randolph Dies at Millwood, Va.

Winchester, Va., Jan. 31 (Spl.).—Miss Polly Cary Randolph, 83, whose family long has been prominent in Clarke County, died today at Millwood.

She is survived by several nephews, among them Col. Robert Randolph, of Chicago, who was prominently identified with the "Secret Six," organized to stamp out crime, and the Rev. Oscar D. Randolph, of Lynchburg, headmaster of the Virginia Episcopal School. The funeral will be conducted Saturday from Christ Church, Millwood.

Maryland Man Held As Brother's Slayer

A Prince Georges County coroner's jury, in session yesterday at Upper Marlboro, held George Bias, colored, 19, of Mitchellville, Md., on a charge of murder in connection with the death of his brother, Edward Bias, 24.

Defendant Gets $1,000 Verdict in Crash Suit

Frederick, Md., Jan. 31 (AP).—Wesley P. Stephen, of Woodstock, Va., was awarded a verdict of $1,000 by a circuit court jury although he was the defendant in an action brought by Edward C. Gallagher, of Washington, following an automobile collision June 11, 1933, near Thurmont. The plaintiff said an appeal would be made.

Democrat Club To Hold Dance, Visit Assembly

Plans for Coming Month Listed by Group in Prince Georges.

Plans to visit the Maryland Legislature Wednesday, February 20, are being completed by the Young Men's Democratic Club of Prince Georges County.

A committee to set the place for a supper in connection with the visit has been appointed by H. Winship Wheatley, jr., club president. It is composed of Irvin G. Owings, chairman; R. Earle Sheriff, John A. Johnson and members of the county's delegation in the House of Delegates. Gov. Harry W. Nice, State Senator Lansdale G. Sasscer, of Prince Georges County, president of the State Senate, and Emanuel Gorfine, speaker of the House of Delegates, will be among the invited guests.

Completion of plans for the mid-winter dance to be given Saturday, February 8, at the Beaver Dam Country Club has been announced. R. Earle Sheriff, chairman of the club's social committee, which has charge of arrangements, has announced his complete committee. Arnett Cord, of Lanhaf, is vice chairman. Other members are Fred R. Binger, jr., Thomas Gough, Thomas Huddleston, Charles E. Buete, jr., Howard Slater, E. F. Zalesak, George M. Harrison, Robert Forest and Paul Welsh.

It was voted to ask the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to apply to PWA Administrator Ickes for funds for the opening and improving of Eastern avenue, from New Hampshire avenue to Cedar avenue, Takoma Park. It also was voted to recommend to the Capital Transit Co. and Public Utilities Commission to instal a switch at Georgia avenue and Kennedy street, so that some of the Takoma Park cars might operate over the Georgia avenue line, but that there be no reduction in the number of cars operating to Takoma Park, and further, that the Kennedy street line be double tracked to Takoma Park and westward to Fourteenth street.

R. L. H. Jones, chairman of the special committee authorized to investigate telephone rates, reported on a conference held with telephone officials in which the latter pointed out that the matter of Maryland property valuation was in the Supreme Court of the United States on application of the Public Service Commission of Maryland, and that until this court reached a decision the company could not reduce service charges. The Chamber of Commerce seeks a reduction comparable with that effected in the District.

Dr. Janney Addresses Annapolis Clubwomen

Millersville, Md., Jan. 31. (Spl.).—Dr. J. J. Janney, of the board of public welfare of Anne Arundel County, and Miss Anita J. Faatz, of Baltimore, supervisor of social welfare of the board of State aid and charities, were guest speakers at the meeting of the Woman's Club of Annapolis and Anne Arundel County this week at the home of Mrs. Henry Wigley.

Each speaker told of relief work in the county and answered many questions regarding the public welfare program. Mrs. Wardlaw Miles, of Baltimore, president of the Maryland branch of the Needlework Guild of America, described the work of the guild and suggested the establishment of a branch in the county. Mrs. F. Conrad Stoll, of Brooklyn, presided. Other guests were Mrs. George Young, of Washington Grove, Montgomery County, chairman of resolutions in the Maryland Federation of Women's Clubs, and Mrs. Frank M. Hoadley, of Chevy Chase, editor of the Maryland Club Woman.

Fletcher Seeks Youth to Pace G. O. P. in 1936

Intensify Opposition to New Deal, Republican Chairman Urges.

New York, Jan. 31 (U.P.).—Henry Prather Fletcher, Republican national chairman, tonight outlined his program for revival of the party in a drive to recapture the presidency in 1936.

Addressing New York Republicans, Fletcher said the party must:

Give youth a greater voice in its councils "if we are going to escape dying like an old tree at the top."

Intensify opposition to the New Deal because President Roosevelt "advocates unsound national and economic policies" which may cause the Nation "to reap the whirlwind of demagogic radicalism."

Support social welfare legislation and "advocate the correction of abuses which have grown up in the economic field."

Equitable Tax Burden.

Support an equitable distribution of the tax burden and insist upon a fair distribution of public funds which are contributed by taxes.

Fight the movement toward an increasing presidential dictatorship as proved by "the astonishing and degrading spectacle of the legislative branch of our Federal Government supinely abdicating its constitutional papers and authority into the hands of the Executive."

Fletcher soothed young Republicans who have fought his chairmanship, asserting, "I regard it as a healthy sign that some have demanded the silver head of the national chairman on a platter and a reorganization of the national committee."

"I wish to assure you that reactionaries and stand-patters are not in control of our party organization," he said, adding that "some prospective candidates for the Presidency seem fearful lest the national committee may seek to dominate the next convention in the interest of reaction, or a particular group or candidate."

Party of Opposition.

"If the two-party system is to survive in this country, we must not shirk our responsibility as a party of opposition * * * based on financial and economic sanity," Fletcher said, asserting that New Deal politics can not succeed "without destroying our economic system."

The speaker attacked the Administration's program of public works to relieve unemployment and charged President Roosevelt with misrepresentation in holding up England as an example for this country to follow. The British government officially has stated, he said, that "the experiment of large public works as a method of dealing with unemployment has been tried and has failed, and it is not intended to repeat it."

Fletcher called Secretary of the Interior Ickes a "presidential errand boy," and described the times as "the third year of the Roosevelt depression."

Diary Charges Ship Influence At White House

Alleges Group Agreed to Share Contracts at Conference.

Murfin, Judge Advocate General of the Navy, rejected the Bath Iron Works' bid as being illegal on the ground that they had not presented fixed price bid as well as adjusted price bid.

"Mr. Newell (Peter Newell, head of Bath Iron Works), said that afternoon that he was going home and that he hoped he would have better luck next time. * * * At Mr. Homer's urging, Mr. Newell stayed here to confer as to what could be done to overcome the situation."

Next day, the memorandum read: "Mr. Homer called Admiral C. J. Peoples, paymaster of the Navy, who is the President's closest friend in the Navy Department, to luncheon, and they conferred with him as to the best method to be followed in overcoming this awkward situation.

"Admiral Peoples concurred in the suggestions of Mr. Homer, and made further suggestions which were immediately carried out.

Telegrams Sent to President.

"Ten telegrams were prepared in Mr. Homer's office and they were transmitted to Bath by Mr. L. E. Thebeau to his secretary who, in turn, transmitted them to the parties who were to send them to the President.

"At 6:30 p. m. Mr. Homer called Mr. Marvin McIntyre and asked that these telegrams be segregated from the mass of telegrams and delivered to the President at breakfast. This was done."

The memorandum then related the President called to the White House a group of naval officials.

The outcome of the conferences, the memorandum continued, was that officials of two other minor companies were called to a conference by Newell, including J. W. Powell, president of the United Drydocks Co., and L. I. Korndorff, president of the Federal Shipbuilding and Drydock Co.

July 30, the memorandum continued: "Mr. Powell, Mr. Korndorff and Mr. Newell spent the entire day until 6:30 at night in Mr. Homer's apartment, and reached a definite agreement as to procedure and that each would have two destroyers to build."

Navy Board Is Mentioned.

On August 3, the day contracts for the 27-ship PWA program were let, was this notation:

"The Navy Board went to see the President at Hyde Park for his decision in regard to the contracts, which came out exactly as planned regarding the three above-mentioned yards."

The testimony of Larouche followed assertions by Wilder that the Navy Department was under "tremendous political pressure" from many sources to give the shipbuilding companies business at steadily rising prices, regardless of offers of smaller companies to do the work cheaper.

Assertions that Homer had been a "fixer" or "chiseler" in securing naval shipbuilding contracts "for a consideration" were branded as false by a Washington attorney, Axel B. Gravem.

Three witnesses had testified earlier that Gravem offered the services of a "fixer" to Wilder for $250,000. The "fixer," the witness quoted Gravem as saying, was to obtain naval contracts from the 1933 program, which the company had failed to get from the August program of that year by regular bidding.

Wilder asserted the "Big Three" companies had agreed among themselves on division of the business and were bidding accordingly by a system of "accommodation bids."

Neither Secretary Swanson nor other Navy officials made any statements yesterday concerning Wilder's testimony of a "political conference" at Hyde Park. The Navy Secretary did speak of the rejection of increasing bids on a cruiser mentioned by Wilder, saying the ship finally had been built at the Philadelphia Navy Yard.

Eight Robberies Laid To 'Phantom Burglar'

Hagerstown, Md., Jan. 31 (Spl.). Residents here are arming as a result of eight burglaries by the "phantom" robber in a month. The homes of Roy Marr and Charles Demmitt were looted during the night, money and jewelry being taken.

The burglar is believed to have been frightened when Mrs. Fred Stahl saw him outside the home of Joseph Bearinger and gave the alarm by phone. Police got a number of fingerprints at both homes.

F. Y. Brown Buried At Fauquier Springs

Warrenton, Va., Jan. 31 (Spl.). Funeral services were held yesterday at Fauquier Springs for Francis Y. Brown, 76, who died at his home Monday.

He was a native of Rappahannock County, and for many years was in the milling business. Later, he moved to the springs, and was in the merchandise business there. He married Miss Green, of Fauquier County, daughter of the late W. N. Green, by whom he is survived. A daughter, Miss Kate Green, also survives.

Rising Tides.

Talk of harnessing the tides of Passamaquoddy and of establishing Federal gasoline stations is mingled with discussion of the President's $4,880,000,000 public works-relief project. Whether or not these casual imaginings are actually to be a part of the Administration's vast program nobody knows. They very likely will be, once the sweeping authority demanded has been given.

The Senate Appropriations Committee is conducting hearings on the bill giving the President carte blanche to spend $4,880,000,000. From these sessions the public has been excluded. Even the Senators who attend, however, have been able to glean very little specific information from Administration spokesmen.

Admiral Peoples was sent back to the White House for specific data on the projects to be undertaken, but he returned with only the report of the National Resources Board, which shows how $40,000,000,000 could be spent. At the end of yesterday's hearing Senator Glass admitted: "We didn't get any estimates and got little more information." Not even the chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee knows how this money would be spent.

Admiral Peoples did make a concrete suggestion about Government gas stations. Doubtless this is one of a hundred equally gaseous possibilities. When such an inordinate grant of power is linked with active imaginations, and a broad suggestion of political favoritism, it is not surprising that some of the Senators are a little dizzy.

Several months ago the President set aside the judgment of the PWA and authorized a large grant of funds for the Grand Coulee dam in the Columbia River. As a result, a vast power dam is being constructed with no appreciable market for the power in sight.

Gov. Brann of Maine is now out to improve upon the feat of the politicians from the Northwest. After a visit to the White House he is convinced that the President will approve a $30,000,000 experiment in creating power from Passamaquoddy's tides. Even if the scheme is feasible from an engineering point of view, the use to which a vast supply of power would be put in northern Maine is a mystery. In these circumstances the Administration will find it difficult to escape the suggestion that the strongest arguments in favor of the Passamaquoddy project are the campaign promises of Gov. Brann.

The element of warning in Gov. Brann's scheme to harness the tides and Admiral Peoples' vision of deserving Democrats operating Government gas stations should not be lost upon the Senate.

Secretary Roper is convinced that solution of the trade and production problems of every country lies in arriving at mutual agreements on how world production and trade shall be apportioned. He therefore suggests the creation of an international board with power to fix production quotas for world consumption, in the belief that "if the nations of the earth through some regulatory power could compel the member nations to stick by their quotas, the question of overproduction and surpluses would be wiped out in a very short time."

While this recommendation is general in character, the immediate concern of the Secretary is to further the conclusion of an international pact regulating the world production and sale of cotton. One strongly suspects that in this case "regulation" is merely a synonym for protection against foreign encroachment upon the export markets of the United States, which may be permanently lost through our short-sighted methods of raising cotton prices and thus encouraging the production of cheaper foreign growths.

On what basis would a regulatory power allot quotas to countries that can undercut our prices with a profit to themselves and a gain to their people? What board, however omniscient and impartial, could hope to restrain a country that found sales advantageous, though made at the expense of another nation? Finally, what reason is there to suppose that the United States would submit to the decision of an economic arbiter that presumed to tell us how much cotton or other commodities we might produce for export?

Would Senators who shudder at the "entangling alliances" imaginatively supposed to be involved in World Court membership embrace a proposal committing our economic destinies into the keeping of an international board? Would Father Coughlin ever tolerate that? The proposal does credit to the imaginative faculties of the Secretary of Commerce, but the emotions aroused in foreigners will range from polite incredulity to sardonic amusement.

The Eastman Report.

The recommendations contained in the report of Coordinator of Transportation Eastman are the outcome of studies of a scope and thoroughness which nowadays are all too rare as preliminaries to proposals for sweeping governmental changes.

Pointing out that the financial condition of the roads has not improved materially since his first report was made a year ago, Mr. Eastman attributes the continued low level of earnings not only to depression but to "an extraordinary growth of competitive forms of transportation."

Nevertheless, the railroads are still the "backbone of our transportation system." General business suffers if they are not prosperous, and so do investors in railroad securities, held by banks and investment institutions which control the savings of millions of Americans. The question, therefore, is how to fit the railroads into a general transportation system and enable them to "secure the share of business and revenue which is warranted by their potential ability to serve." With that end in view, Mr. Eastman considers various remedial plans, rejecting proposals that would entail a radical change in railroad conditions or necessitate transfer of the roads to Government ownership.

Conditional upon enactment of the water and motor carrier bills which are recommended for passage, Mr. Eastman also proposes a radical reorganization and enlargement of the Interstate Commerce Commission (opposed in a preliminary statement by the present I. C. C.). The suggested changes are urged as a means of enabling the commission to discharge new duties with greater dispatch and efficiency.

A new contribution to the theory of regulation is the recommendation that it should not only undertake to correct evils and abuses after they have arisen but should foresee difficulties and plan to avert them. Work of this sort, involving research and dealing with problems of operation, rates, financing, etc., is now being undertaken cooperatively by the railroads through a new central organization—the Association of American Railroads. However, Mr. Eastman does not believe that representatives of private railroad managements can meet the necessities of the situation, in all respects, partly because they cover only one field of transportation and partly because of the obstacles to wholehearted cooperation created by conflicting interests.

Consequently, creation of a permanent coordinator of transportation is recommended, whose duty it would be to "keep informed as to the management, operation and development of all transportation agencies with especial reference to their proper coordination, the avoidance of waste, both now and for the future, and the promotion of a national system of transportation which will meet public needs." Although the coordinator would be independent of the regulatory board, to a certain extent, the I. C. C. would have full power to review his orders.

In attempting to eliminate waste, the present coordinator has been seriously hampered by the emergency railroad act of 1933, which protected workers in service in May of that year against loss of employment or demotion. As this act expires next June, the carriers will thereafter be free to dismiss workers in the absence of new prohibitive legislation. That such reductions are imperative is evident from a reading of the coordinator's report.

At the same time, it is realized that further dismissals of workers, following the tremendous reduction in personnel which has already occurred, would have most serious social results. Consequently, it is proposed that in addition to a system of retirement annuities, some form of dismissal compensation should be given to employes displaced by labor-saving improvements. Such a system would provide some protection against the hardships of technological unemployment and would also enable the roads to counter arguments for an uneconomic shortening of the working day. Moreover, dismissal allowances would act as a constructive control of the rate of technological change, which often proceeds at a pace that is not only socially but often economically wasteful.

Other problems of major interest are reviewed in this last report of the Federal Coordinator of Transportation. They need not all be cited to show that it represents a most constructive attempt to do justice to the interests of railways, and of railway labor. And always uppermost in the coordinator's mind has been the necessity of developing an economic and efficient national transportation service that will satisfy the requirements of the country as a whole.

Style And The Man.

Richard Washburn Child would have been the last among either literary men or diplomats to pretend to preeminence in either field. But his brief adventure in diplomacy ably carried on that tradition of the American Foreign Service which has long looked with favor on literary craftsmen as fit incumbents of noncareer positions.

After all, appointments of the sort have included very few mistakes. The style is the man. Child wrote with distinction, and the charm of his personality. As Ambassador to Italy he made Mussolini his friend and so—at a time when a less winning personality might have done infinite harm—he kept Italian-American relations on a stable and even keel.

One remembers at various foreign posts American authors of books more important than the books of Child. There were Irving and Hawthorne. There was Thomas Nelson Page, who preceded Child at Rome. But it is difficult to recall any literary appointee who failed in either the diplomatic or consular branch of the State Department's work. It is pleasant to see this tradition upheld today in several of our embassies. It is pleasant to recall how that tradition was upheld only yesterday by Richard Washburn Child.

The New Monopoly.

Reports that Federal agencies are drafting bills for State Legislatures to pass come as a shock to those who are schooled in the traditions of American Government. In previous years such a practice would have brought a storm of protest, especially from the Democratic Party. Now it is regarded, in Administration circles, as merely incidental to a vast public works program. But the implications go far deeper than that.

Revolutionary changes frequently take place with little contemporary public realization of what is happening. History carries ample proof of that. Yet for a people to pass through an important transition without even discussing its significance is a strong indication of that intellectual bankruptcy which precedes political decay. The complete absence of concern about the basic changes which are taking place in our governmental structure is the most deplorable aspect of this latest encroachment of the Federal Government upon the responsibilities of the States.

The States are being asked with such subtle finesse to surrender their prerogatives that they are actually pleased to do so. The Administration proposes to spend nearly five billions on relief, entirely at its own discretion. Some basic State laws must be amended to conform with the PWA's requirements before the localities can participate in these extensive benefits. No Commonwealth under financial pressure from four years of depression can resist such an appeal. So the business of drafting laws for obedient Legislatures to enact is turned over to the Federal bureaucracy.

No doubt a certain degree of centralization is both inevitable and desirable. Wealthy regions must be called upon to assist those less fortunate. The disconcerting aspect of this development is that it comes about as a by-product of an emergency program, without any adequate consideration of its effects upon the basic structure of our Government. Congress has talked about public works, jobs, relief, etc. But the actions it is taking cut under these specific objectives to undermine that Federal system which guarantees to the people of each locality control over their own affairs. On that more fundamental issue Congress has been ominously silent.

In the field of business the Administration is apparently trying to break down enormous corporative units on the ground that it is socially dangerous to permit the concentration of economic power in a few hands. It may prove far more dangerous to permit the enormous concentration of political power which is now being built up.

Kings On Skis.

A reigning king and a dethroned one met recently for the first time in Belgrade. The introduction was a ceremonious event, marked by all the dignity and pomp expedient to their ranks. Perhaps no two members of European royalty today are more surrounded by intrigue than these two.

Following the presentation, the court withdrew to let a present and a former monarch become acquainted. This they proceeded to do in the accepted fashion of boys the world over. Soon the two were outdoors skiing—the 13-year-old Crown Prince Mihai of Rumania, who stepped from the throne when his father returned in 1930, and the 11-year-old King Peter II of Yugoslavia, who ascended the throne after the recent assassination of his father.

Tiring of this sport the two boys, in whose veins runs the same strain of royal blood, played in Peter's palace workshop. The boys have a grief in common—one the loss of a father by death, the other the loss of a mother by divorce. But even the sorrow of princes fades before the laughter of youth.

The meeting of these two little kings is pathetic. It may be true that in America many a mother cherishes the thought that some day her son will be President, but not until he has reached his full physical and mental stature. Over here, some are born to leadership, others acquire it. But romping in the snows of the Balkans are two youngsters who are, fortunately, only half aware that they have had it thrust upon them. "The king is in the parlor, counting out his toys," and for a time, at least, troubles are forgotten.

Things could be worse. Suppose the operation of natural laws depended upon public opinion.

Polling Students On Peace.

(From the Brooklyn Daily Eagle.)

The College Peace Poll conducted by the Literary Digest and the Association of College Editors has already obtained expressions of opinion from more than 29,000 students, representing 30 colleges and universities. The vote on the question whether or not the United States can stay out of war is better than two-to-one in the affirmative. More than 24,000 declared they would fight if the country were invaded, as against 5,408 who said they would not. But on the question of fighting in a war wherein the United States became the invader, the above vote was almost exactly reversed.

On the wisdom of universal conscription in the event of war 23,709 voted for conscription and 6,012 voted against it. A big navy and a big air force were voted down, and sentiment for the League of Nations tops the sentiment against it by a scant majority of 1,709 votes.

Women And Jobs.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In reply to the Square Dealer's recent letter on "No Married Women," permit me to suggest that when married women are deprived of their rights to gainful employment, the retirement begins with the First Lady of the Land, the Vice President's wife, the Secretary of Labor and all the wives and daughters of Senators and Representatives in Congress, whose parents should be well able to support them. And when it comes to nepotism the Square Dealer might well look into the pay rolls of his own delegation.

Section 213 of the economy bill is only one of the stupid achievements of the present Administration. It might seem wise, now that economy seems to be a thing of the past, that this section be repealed, unless the Government in its bigheartedness desires to add to the relief rolls the aged parents and other relatives which these women are supporting.

In the papers the officials are great for the Civil Service and the merit system. Then why take others when people well qualified with experience and Civil Service status are available?

West Coast Tremors.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In a speech opposing American adhesion to the World Court a United States Senator relieved himself of the following bit of gratuitous bombast: "Japan has about as much chance in a war with America as a mouse has in the hands (sic) of a well-fed cat!"

Probably comparisons are odious to patriotic Senators, nevertheless in this case they are very suggestive. First, the navies of the two nations: At the close of 1932 they compare as follows: United States Navy, 101 ships; Japanese navy, 184; United States Navy tonnage, 728,050; Japanese, 726,138; United States naval personnel, 79,000; Japanese, 85,000.

Now consider the armies: United States Army full strength on June 30, 1934, 133,200; National Guard, 187,412; Japanese army, 225,000 and 1,952,000 trained reserves. Consider further that Japan proper, along with Formosa and Korea, represents an area less than that of Texas, but defended by an army of over two millions of trained soldiers; the United States has an area of more than 3,000,000 square miles, but only less than 350,000 trained men for defense! Also the United States fleet has two ocean fronts, far apart, to defend; Japan can concentrate her whole fleet at one point!

These figures hardly bear out the senatorial boast, while his cat and mouse figure of speech is shown to be rediculous. One must imagine that our solon still shares the opinion of Japan held by Russia—before 1904-05—an opinion badly shattered on Manchurian battlefields and at Tshushima! Such senatorial frothing might well help to bring about war. It certainly would prove how poor a substitute senatorial oratory is for an effective army and navy.

The World Court Decision.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Senate has spoken. Although 71 nations of the world have been "tricked" into joining the World Court, Iceland, Costa Rica and the United States have definitely shown their superiority by refusing to join with them.

The position taken by the Senate was the right one. We have nothing in common with England, France, Germany, Italy, Mexico, Canada and the other nations of the world. All of our interests lie with Iceland and Costa Rica. We are especially concerned with Iceland in the summer, and in the winter our thoughts turn reverently toward Costa Rica.

Like the Three Musketeers, we stand "All for one and one for all." All hail, then, the new triumvirate—Iceland, Costa Rica and the United States! Let their flags be forever entwined as symbolic of the three nations of the world that were in step while all the rest marched in disorder! MELVIN D. HILDRETH.
Washington, Jan. 30.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Apropos the proposed World Court and the American decision not to join in at this time it may be helpful to reflect that big powers of the earth can not as yet show among them a statesman who would be universally acceptable as a presiding judge over such a court.

In fact, if there should be found one such man, he would, by the prevailing laws of his own country, be classed as disloyal to his nation or nationalistic policies. At this stage of human civilization, when popular concepts of patriotism, culture, religion and government are in a state of transition and upheaval, it might be better for each and every big nation to devote more time and energy for the solution of domestic economics.

And to this end, we have repeatedly declared that America can, when willing, inaugurate an entirely new method of industry that will not only increase employment but eliminate the conditions (incident to the present industrial system) which seem to have precipitated the present tendency to insanity, crime and suicide on a large scale. The issue now before us is primarily national or local, and if we can prove ourselves equal to the task, we may be setting a good example for other nations to copy. C. PHILIPS.
Washington, Jan. 30.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Advocates of the World Court ought to feel encouraged in the progress of the movement to have the United States become a member. Fifty-two votes for and 36 against is not a bad showing, even if the few votes necessary to get the required two-thirds were lacking. This should stir the advocates of the court into more energetic action and no doubt the next time it comes to a vote it will be carried.

While I do not believe that the World Court would be effective in every case in settling international difficulties, I do believe that having such an agency available for those parties or nations that are peaceably inclined when disputes arise would pave the way to amicable settlements.

The radio, fast steamers, airplanes and other modern inventions, to say nothing of the need for international exchange of commodities, have brought all the nations closer together and their interests while not identical are so mutually interbound that we can not progress on a policy of splendid isolation. A narrow and selfish nationalism as expressed in Senator Schall's irrational outburst in the Senate recently is designed to bring ruin upon us all. There is nothing "patriotic" or self-preservative about such a policy. The nations of the world are now a social unit and can only progress to the extent that they cooperate.

All the finer things of life are beyond the narrow confines of any one nation. All great music, all great art, religion, science, culture are international. Even in ages gone by, nations recognized the desirability of promoting commerce between nations. The great Hanseatic League of the Middle Ages helped to liberate the minds and bodies of men through a healthy exchange of products and ideas. Now we are to go back into our shells like tortoises and close the shells.

If the World Court were no more than a friendly gesture, I would favor it strongly now because I have learned something since it was first proposed and rejected by America. I can see now with the mellowing of time and mature reflection that President Wilson was correct in his idea of a family of nations but was wrong in trying to force it down the throats of his countrymen. What he should have done was to carry on a slower policy of educating the public up to the ideal.

INTERNATIONALIST.
Washington, Jan. 30.

A Forgotten Midwinter Scene.

While regretting the abandonment of so many American customs and traditions, let us pause to shed a tear over the passing of that truly Middle Western institution, old-fashioned kitchen stove.

The early midwinter mornings used to find members of the family grouped around the stove and, despite the low temperatures outside, warmth and cheer radiated around the old "Home Friend." Early risers in the family even were permitted to dress for the day before the fire in far greater comfort than attempting to don icy garments in an unheated upstairs sleeping room.

The family gathering before the stove of a winter morning always will remain one of the lasting and treasured memories of childhood. Old Fluff, the family cat, snoozed undisturbed in a nearby cob box, and often, on the coldest days, Heck, upon whom the years of dogdom rested none too lightly, was permitted to bask in the rear of the stove. When, in his dreams of chasing rabbits, he started yipping, he was quickly ousted from his warm nook.

A strong companionship was welded before the "Home Friend" on those days, and there was an optimism as bright as the new day.

Parents of today who bemoan the lack of family reunions and a chance to visit with their children might try installing an old-fashioned stove in the kitchen and await the wonders that are certain to occur. To obtain best results the automatic furnace should be stopped, the radiant fires turned off and the fireplace closed for the winter.

Then, as in other years, the kitchen and its crackling fire again will assume its cherished place in the lives of the people.

The Post Impressionist

"I Don't Care!"

Post Office, Friday.

WHAT about America's own wild women, in the days when wild women were unwonted?

Miss (or is it Mrs.?) Louisa Aldin asks us something like that, because she has read and marked our recent Column about those British amazons Marie Lloyd and the two vestal Vestas: Victoria and Tilley. Miss (or is it Mrs.?) Aldin notes that we mentioned Eva Tanguay and Minnie Renwood, but objects to our having "merely mentioned" them.

It was indeed a sin of omission.

American Eva Tanguay (Canadian born, 1878) really did frighten and fascinate the youth of the present eventful century, a good deal more than either of her foreign predecessors. The antithesis of modern Eva Le Gallienne in "the legitimate," Eva Tanguay, in vaudeville, really wanted to be a shocker (on the stage) and really succeeded in making everybody believe she was a shocker off of it.

She whooped into fame with a song called "I Don't Care:" people thought she didn't care a tinker's dam. In these times we have "The Scandals of 1935." There wasn't room for more than one scandal a year in the narrow days of the budding nineteen hundreds.

And, through quite several of those years, Miss Tanguay was it.

The typical "stage-beauty" (that's what they called 'em) of that era considered beauty sufficient unto itself and proposed that it should remain, if not "a joy forever," at least the sole asset of her theatrical career. Critics and public agreed with her. She wouldn't try to act or sing: a High Tradition held that she oughtn't to. Her job was to remain beautiful, and she worked at it—immobile always, generally stupid. Not "beautiful but dumb:" beautiful and dumb. As for the idea of making a grimace—that would be desecration of her Art.

Eva was beautiful——

[She was! If your father tells you she wasn't, Louisa, he simply reveals the fact that he lacked the finer appreciations. We knew her—and she was beautiful.]

—but she also had brains.

Ordinarily, brains were a liability. Only, Eva reinforced hers with daring. She would run on stage, stop short, let you see how good-looking and dignified she could be—for one instant. Then, "making faces" to which Zazu Pitts must owe something of her present reputation, Eva would let her hair fly wild, her legs fly Thorton Wilder and her voice go crazy.

You, Louisa, wouldn't see anything shocking in that, because you could not see anything unusual in it. But your mother—in those days before you arrived to educate her—said it was depraved. Even your father said it was "rather emancipated." The sole difference between your mother's opinion and your father's was one of degree; he liked it, she didn't.

So of course Eva was popular. So of course there was nothing too simply awful to be left unsaid about her by her detractors and especially by her admirers. She was considered the supreme symbol of Wilfulness. She was considered the Grand Alienatress of Affection, the Archduchess of Divorce and the Sovereign of Suicides.

All wrongly. After nearly each one of her performances in New York (where she achieved the record vaudeville run of her era—three uninterrupted years) Eva took a train for her tiny house on the far side of Long Island, where she lived a life as simple as that of a French-Canadian farmwife.

"I know my crazy vogue won't last," she told us. "I'm salting all my money into Long Island real estate."

A young man we used to know, who had then never seen her before, went with his boss to the theater at which she was cavorting and—the little liar!—bragged that he knew her. His boss asked to be presented. After anguished cogitation about how to make good, the young fellow sent a note. The boss didn't see it, but it read:

"Dear Miss Tanguay: I should so like to talk to you again. I want to introduce you to my father."

It worked. A mumbled presentation left his boss in the dark concerning an alleged and unflattering relationship. Only after the boss had been got rid of did Eva confess to the subordinate:

"I ought to own up that I really don't remember you—but I get so many notes from nasty people that I couldn't resist a note from a boy who was nice enough to want me to meet his father."

The moralistic truth is that Eva made her first dramatic success by touring this country as the hero of "Little Lord Fauntleroy" at a tender and impressionable age. Audiences forgot it. She didn't. At heart, she never got over it. She never really ceased to be Cedric Errol—plus a good sense for publicity. . . .

* * *

Wilentz Steals Show At Hauptmann Trial

Prosecuting Attorney Emerges As Leading Figure In Flemington Courthouse.

(Special Correspondence of The Post.)

New York.

IN MOST famous criminal trials, except those which deal with politics, the cloud of glory and renown gathers about the head of the defendant's attorney. That is why lawyers rush in where angels fear to tread and offer their services to clients whom a yellow dog might often shun. Criminals, if they are spectacular enough, and even if they have no financial resources, find no difficulty in securing eminent advocates. An attorney's career is often founded on a single defense, provided always that the trial is sufficiently advertised.

The Hauptmann trial at Flemington is sufficiently advertised in all conscience. Yet the aura of renown apparently is not descending according to pattern or prognostication. It ought to be Edward J. Reilly, Hauptmann's chief counsel, who is making a national reputation and no doubt his name is pretty well known by this time. But the figure which is emerging day by day into a more and more definite fame is the dapper and unexpected one of David T. Wilentz, attorney general of New Jersey. Little, unimpressive at first, this David wields a swift and rapid sling.

Before the trial started few people had heard of David Wilentz outside his own State, and not so many there. He is not in Who's-Who. He was just one of Frank Hague's boys, an organization Democrat from Perth Amboy, the obscure and unattractive town which produced Gov. Hoffman from the other party. Before tackling Hauptmann, one of the strangest enigmas in criminal history, Wilentz had never even conducted a criminal trial, though he had often appeared as an assistant. But Gov. Moore appointed him to supersede the prosecutor of Monmouth, who was removed on charges, and he was in for it.

• • • •

THERE was general criticism when New Jersey extradited Hauptmann. It was felt he should have been tried in the Bronx where the evidence of extortion of the ransom money had been carefully worked up. Legal experts freely pointed out that New Jersey could make out only a weak case for murder, a circumstantial case at best. Yet Wilentz turns up with one of the most elaborately prepared cases in criminal jurisprudence, one in which no single detail had been overlooked or slighted. And his presentation has been little short of masterly.

It was also felt that Hauptmann, the iron man, the Saxon machine-gunner with nerves of steel, would prove too much for Wilentz, the inexperienced prosecutor. Has he? That, of course, is for the jury to decide. But stung, flicked, goaded and stabbed by the little patent-leather-haired fencer in front of him, the sallow, impassive German has shouted or mumbled admission after admission, unabashed confessions of lying, which have certainly shocked courtroom listeners whatever the reaction of the jury may be.

Hauptmann, writhing under his cross-examination like a wounded snake at sundown, has a slow force, a strength of resistance which impresses everyone. But Wilentz, shouting, too, when he deems it necessary, wheels, charges, changes his pace, retreats or attacks with a virtuosity and brilliance which amazes. If Hauptmann goes free your correspondent would not like to be David Wilentz.

• • • •

WHO is Wilentz, anyway? Well, he's a smart bridge player with a tendency to run a contract up to slam when he holds the cards. He is also a pleasant talker and a Jimmy Walker dresser. He is only four years older than Hauptmann and, like the Saxon, he is of foreign blood. His family came to the United States from southern Russia when he was so little he can't remember it. He learned his lessons in grade school in Perth Amboy and some years later was graduated from the law school of New York University. In 1919 he was admitted to the bar and became a clerk in the office of Circuit Judge Tom Brown—not the one at Rugby. Finally, as law partner to John E. Toolan, he began to mix zestfully into Jersey politics. Anybody under the wing of Frank Hague at that time was sure to advance.

This doesn't cover his interval in the war. He enlisted in the ranks and learned to operate a machine gun as coolly and relentlessly as Hauptmann himself. When the war ended he wore a lieutenant's uniform. It was his war experience, no doubt, which converted him to his settled though possibly fine-spun theory that, in kidnaping the Lindbergh baby, Hauptmann was revenging the death of the German ace Richthofen. Hauptmann's child, Mannfred, is named after Richthofen.

Wilentz is married himself and has two sons and a daughter. He is a hard man to fool. For a while before he went into the law he was a newspaper reporter on the Plainfield Courier-News, so he knows what a story is and feels at home among the pencil pushers who have inundated Flemington.

• • • •

HE likes Broadway clothes and affects a gay, broad-brimmed hat which remains glued on his sleek head most of the time he isn't in court. A tilted cigar frequently protrudes from the left-hand corner of his mouth and he isn't afraid to let the jury see a posy on his lapel. In manner he is polite, brisk and cocky. Anybody who takes him for a popinjay is in for a cruel awakening.

"I'm a firm man," he says. "Make no mistake about that. You know where I stand all the time." But Hauptmann doesn't.

Wilentz has stolen the show from Reilly. A clear and definite figure. At the beginning of the trial he was as vague as the dead Fisch Hauptmann keeps dragging across his trail.

• • • •

Addendum: If anything could illustrate the leveling down influence of the Hauptmann trial, the melting pot aspect of it which keeps the eye of banker and baker's boy alike glued to a newspaper, it is the interest Gertrude Stein takes in the case. You might not think that the author of "Tender Buttons" could get her mind on such mundane matters but she does. She and her secretary, Alice B. Toklas, both confess not only that they are interested in this case but that they followed the Hall-Mills case closely. As neither one of them likes to be bothered with punctuation they absorb it over the radio where it is punctuated only at intervals by vigorous exclamation points on the latest patent nose drops which you are advised to take at the first sniffle. And the radio accounts of the Flemington drama are enough to give anybody the sniffles.

F.U.M.A. to Get New Dormitory

Building to Be Erected Sime Time in Summer, Director Says.

Charlottesville, Va., Jan. 31 (Spl.).—Fork Union Military Academy, widely known Baptist school located 30 miles east of Charlottesville, in Fluvanna County, is to have a new dormitory erected the coming summer, according to M. C. Thomas, of this city, one of the directors of the institution. The new dormitory, plans for which have already been prepared by Dr. J. J. Wicker, president, will be located close to the school gymnasium, and will accomodate 100 additional pupils.

The present enrollment at the academy is 255, which exceeds that of any previous year in the history of the school.

Fork Union Academy is now in its thirty-sixth year, having been established in 1898 by the late Dr. William E. Hatcher, one of the leading ministers of the Baptist denomination in Virginia. It is one of the honor military schools of the country, and is a fully accredited member of the Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools of the Southern States, and a member of the Association of Military Colleges and Schools of the United States.

The athletic teams turned out at Fork Union have attained a high rank in recent years.

Session Is Arranged For Historical Groups

Shepherdstown, W. Va., Jan. 31 (Spl.).—A meeting of several independent agencies will be held here tomorrow evening under the sponsorship of the Jefferson Historical Society, in an effort to agree upon a coordinated program for the activities of the various groups in designating places in the Eastern Panhandle deserving of being marked as historical spots, it was announced today by A. D. Kenamond, dean of the faculty of Shepherd College here and president of the society.

A movement to mark historic spots is now under way under State sponsorship and direction of the State commission. Invited to the discussion tomorrow are Francis W. Daniels, Shenandoah Junction, member for this area of West Virginia Commission on Historic and Scenic Markers; representatives of Eastern Panhandle Association, and of D. A. R., in this section, and the historic society.

Leslie Damron Rites Held in Orange County

Charlottesville, Va., Jan. 31 (Spl.).—Funeral rites for Leslie Damron, for 20 years a merchant at Burnleys, in northern Albemarle County, were held at 2 p. m. today at the residence of his father, Austin Damron, in Orange County. The service was conducted by the Rev. J. T. Cox, of Gordensville, and interment was in the family plot.

Mr. Damron was stricken with paralysis some time during the night Monday. His mother died about six years ago. He was a nephew of John I. Damron, Charlottesville contractor, and a cousin of Z. I. Damron, of the local police department.

Along The Potomac

With Carlisle Bargeron

The New Deal.

WE always like to see a Senate shipbuilders' investigation come to town. It brings what the local women columnists call such interesting men, men who can tell such fascinating stories if they are your dinner companion. Some of them bring up such fond associations of the past, too. Ah, they are an intriguing lot, the shipbuilders and their representatives. They get around everywhere, have such wonderful experiences and meet so many important people.

BARGERON.

Who should bob up now before the Nye committee with sensational charges but Lawrence Wilder. It was he who presented Bass Drum Shearer to the shipbuilders back in 1927 and they thought when a Senate committee got onto it later that they would never hear the last of it. The Senate committee got onto it when Shearer sued them for payment for wrecking the Geneva naval parley. Charlie Schwab and the others but Charlie much more angelically, always insisted that they would not have had Shearer wreck the conference for anything, but wreck it is what Shearer said he was supposed to do.

• • • •

Anyway, Wilder used to be around here a lot, throwing, as he says himself, parties for the newspapermen and officialdom. He was the head of the New York Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. in those days. He seems to have left sometime after the Shearer unpleasantness and have apparently been on the outside looking in ever since. He has a shipbuilding company down around Pensacola now.

The most interesting man one could possibly meet now, though, is Mr. A. P. Homer. One can't do that just at present, or at least the committee can't, because his doctor testified yesterday that his blood pressure is 250, which is entirely too high blood pressure for one of even the affluence Mr. Homer is said to have attained under the New Deal, and it must have gone up some more as he sat in the committee room yesterday.

It will be recalled that during the Presidential campaign the hapless Republicans charged that Mr. Homer was in the Democratic national headquarters in New York and had solicited shipbuilders for contributions. The Democrats denied it, not so strongly because they knew the country was hell-bent on electing them and they didn't have to worry about little charges like these.

But Mr. Homer was there and he solicited the contributions, too.

• • • •

Now, if one is to believe the story the committee investigator testified Mr. Homer told him his success since the advent of the New Deal would shame Horatio Alger. It is the old story of what an up-and-coming man in America, under the capitalistic system, can do.

Before March 4, 1933, that eventful day when the Democrats came in and closed the banks, Mr. Homer is reputed to have been selling paint, presumably marine paint, for $25 a week. Now he is the man whom Mr. Wilder had previously referred to as the "fixer" in shipbuilding matters here, has a luxurious suite and for one shipbuilding trick received a fee of $50,000.

It was testified that he and Mr. Roosevelt used to be in the lobster business together. This is supposed to have some reference to Mr. Roosevelt's penchant for fishing and not to his expectation of waxing rich back in his pre-Presidential days out of the lobster business.

• • • •

Anyhow, the committee investigator says Mr. Homer left no doubt with him, or rather sought to leave none, that he and Mr. Roosevelt are just like that. And apparently there is no doubt that he is the one the shipbuilders look upon as the fellow having the entree here at present. It is a good entree, too, because we are surely spending a lot of money on ships.

The question of just how much service he actually rendered for the $50,000 and has rendered generally must, of course, remain open until Mr. Homer's blood pressure goes down. The committee is convinced he did quite a lot.

Youth Conference Today.

No End Of Books

Melvin Levy's Melodrama, "Gold Eagle Guy," Stages Brave Buccaneering Days in San Francisco.

By Theodore Hall.

"THERE are," said Frank Norris once, at least with words to this effect, "only three dramatic cities in America—New York, of course, New Orleans, and above all, San Francisco." Downright Californian though he was (and it takes a Californian to teach us the meaning of prejudice), Norris had it completely and precisely right. "Serene thou sittest by thy Western gate," went Joaquin Miller's lovely but mistaken harping, for the very air of San Francisco is heavy with excitement, charged with old gusty legends, keyed to a drama higher and clearer and more vibrant. But I don't want to go too lyric on you.

Still, you have only to look on a map. What city has streets whose names ring out like Kearny and Sutter, Geary and Turk and Eddy, Fremont and Divisidero? Let other names sink deep in your mind—Portsmouth square (where first sounded the cry: "Gold from the American Fork!"); Nob Hill (where bullion weighed down the pockets of swaggering miners, and empire-builders set up their filigreed palaces); Telegraph Hill (which signaled in the clippers from China and whalers from the South Seas).

And the water-front, the Embarcadero, which saw Father Damien sail quietly off and King Kalakaua land with all the pomp of his Hawaiian court, and which heard nightly the rousing jamboree of the dives and honky-tonks of the Barbary Coast, gayest and wickedest spot in a gorgeous, romantic, incredible town.

• • • •

RIGHT there, in the year 1862, in a barroom made over from an old, land-locked packet ship, is where Melvin Levy sets the first scene of his rousing, full-flavored play, "Gold Eagle Guy" (Random House, $2).

Guy Button, the bold, chunky, all-domineering hero, comes on the stage as young sailor breaking ship. We see his traits at once—he sells his sea-going effects at once to two different men, each time for double value; entranced, Gug keeps when it falls the shawl of that hypnotic actress, Adah Mencken (who was, in history two years later, to charm Mark Twain and the boys up in the Comstock); and he allies himself with San Francisco's rising young banker, Will Parrot, crying out that the Lord has made him an instrument "to build a temple of gold eagles!"

Guy rises fast, "climbing the back of every man he comes near and trampling them under," as Parrot puts it later. For he forces the hand of his first employer and seizes his ship to bring over Chinese laborers. He sets up his own Gold Eagle Line and when Japanese competition nearly overturns him, he has one of his ships sunk to hide his outright theft of the two million in gold dust it was carrying to Nome. When a slump comes in town and Parrot's bank trembles, Guy squeezes his old benefactor and takes control himself. By 1906 "Gold Eagle" Guy Button has buccaneered his way to the top of the pile.

And still defiant of his enemies, scorning his son, who hates and threatens to expose him, the old pirate stands up in the plush magnificence of his office and calls upon the Lord to make him like Sampson—and the earthquake brings the marble pillars down.

• • • •

THAT'S melodrama of the rankest sort, of course. With rumbling and thunder and crashes without and everything but the smell of brimstone, the play comes to an end with the sort of spectacular retribution which the stage—along with the popular magazine stories—clings to so dearly.

But though the reader (I can't speak for those who've seen the play acted) squirms in his chair here, he is willing to make that payment. For "Gold Eagle Guy" portrays the bombast and swash-buckling of an era which earned those terms—unless you choose to go hunting for euphemisms. It displays the materials of one of our authentic scenes of romance, for which picturesqueness we should be thankful. Chiming in with the current flair for genial antiquarianism, "Gold Eagle Guy" has brought success to the 1935 season of the Group Theater in New York and an offer of $100,000 for movie rights (he is holding out for more!) to Mr. Levy.

And if, after the persuasive excitement of the play, which rises even from cold print, you have second thoughts—if you begin to think that Guy Button's character is unbelievably single-tracked, and his career successful past all swallowing, and his adoration for Adah Mencken idiotically intense, and the whole panorama too gaudily, gloriously, inflamedly supercolored—you must not blame the theater or Mr. Levy's bold, dramatic hand.

San Francisco, in the brave old days, could have made this melodrama look like a pint of warm milk.

Directors Named For Trade Group

Will Serve Chamber Body in Fredericksburg.

Fredericksburg, Va., Jan. 31 (Spl).—At a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce in city hall tonight to formulate plans for the coming year, 27 additional directors of the chamber who will serve with the eight previously named were announced. The board of directors now consists of C. A. Abbey, Paul E. Baker, Kushener Bauman, Charles Beck, W. W. Braxton, C. W. Caple, C. A. Carmichael, Roger Clark, E. R. Colbert, H. F. White, A. B. Young.

Carroll County Man Writes Book on Key

Westminster, Md., Jan. 31 (Spl.).—Scheduled to be put on sale by February 7, a book entitled "Spangled Banner," the story of Francis Scott Key, has been written by a native of Carroll County, Victor Waybright. The author was brought up near Keysville, the birthplace of Key.

Second Month

By Wm. Lyon Phelps

THE second month of our (comparatively) modern calendar is unique.

All the rest have 31.
Save February alone.

Twenty-eight days except leap year, then 29; but do not make the mistake of thinking that every fourth year is a leap year. The exceptions are the century years 1896 was a leap year, and so was 1904; but 1900 was not, nor was 1800. I have seen this mistake made by novelists and others.

I knew a fortunate lady once—I say fortunate because ladies dislike birthdays—who had hardly any birthday till she grew up, and then, you see, she could count only a few. She was born February 29, 1896. Her first birthday would be when she was eight years old, in 1904; but on that day she was on a cruise around the world and somewhere in the Pacific Ocean they reached that point where one day is jumped; it happened to be February 29. Hence her first birthday came in 1908, when she was 12, or would have come, but I think something or other happened that wiped that one out.

• • • •

Most women, of course, would not go to such expense and trouble to achieve economy in birthdays; they would lie about it.

The month February was not in the earliest Roman or Romulus calendar; but under King Numa Pompilius (715-672 A. D.) two months were added to the year, which made the year begin with January and end with February. This queer month of February, as you see, has been kicked all around the calendar, and did not get its rightful position immediately after January until the year 452 B. C., and then was docked.

Februarius came from the verb februare (to purify) or from februa, a Roman festival which came toward the end of the month. On February 15 there was a tremendous celebration called the Lupercalia (see Shakespeare's "Julius Caesar") when women were hit with whips to cure barrenness.

The Anglo-Saxons called this month Sprout-Kale because cabbage lifted itself above the ground about this time. Later they also called it Solmonath, on account of the sun slowly recovernig from the winter depression.

Please pronounce February as it is spelled, and not Febuary.

Isn't it nice that February has only 28 days? for if it had 31, spring would be just that much longer delayed.

Utility Firm's Rates Rejected

Public Service Body Will Set Up Schedule for Potomac Edison.

Baltimore, Jan. 31 (AP).—After twice rejecting rate schedules offered by the Potomac-Edison Electric Co., the public service commission today began setting up rates of its own, which it plans imposing on the company as of February 1.

Harold E. West, chairman of the commission, today notified R. Paul Smith, president of the utility concern, that the second rate schedule, submitted yesterday, was nearly identical with the first, which already had been rejected. West said:

"They do not fill the requirements of the commission's order and can not be considered a compliance."

The commission had ordered a $325,000 reduction in total income of the company, effective with the February meter readings. Both schedules of rates filed to comply with this order, the commission holds, gives Potomac-Edison subsidiaries outside the State one-third of the cut, whereas the entire reduction should go to Maryland customers.

Court May Name Hospital Trustees

New Bill Would Amend Method of Selection.

Hagerstown, Md., Jan. (Spl.).—Vacancies in the future on the board of trustees of the Washington County Hospital would be filled by judges of the Circuit Court of Washington County instead of permitting the board to select successors to deceased members, under a bill introduced in the Legislature.

The hospital would be known as the Washington County Hospital Association and rescinds the action making the hospital a public corporation.

The bill, which would not become effective until June 1, 1935, would also repeal the provisions giving the board full power to borrow money from Federal, State or local governmental agencies or from any financial institution or individual.

A new hospital building, costing approximately $400.000, is now under construction from funds received from legacies.

Bellomy Rites Held.

Charlottesville, Va., Jan. 31 (Spl.).—Samuel J. Bellomy, 84, retired employe of the Charlottesville Woolen Mills, died yesterday in Staunton. The body was brought here last night and the funeral held at 3 o'clock this afternoon from Hill & Irving's funeral parlors. Interment was in Riverview Cemetery.

Mr. Bellomy is survived by a step-daughter, Miss Minnie Gianniny, and a step-son, Richard Shisler, both of this city.

British Experiment A Key For New Deal

Large Scale Public Works Pronounced Failure Compared With Steady Policy.

By Elliott Thurston.

MAKING full allowance for the difference in both economic and political conditions in Great Britain, it is impossible to overlook the conclusion of the British government, after more than ten years of trial, that "the experiment of large-scale public works as a method of dealing with unemployment has been tried and has failed, and it is not intended to repeat it."

It is not yet known how the New Deal means to spend its $4,880,000,000 relief fund which Congress evidently intends to vote with no strings attached. Many other questions are to the fore at the moment, chiefly whether the House, at least, in voting a "blank check" has not once more delegated its constitutionally prescribed policy-making powers—and this in the face of the recent Supreme Court decision in the hot oil case warning that such a delegation is unconstitutional.

But beyond this, and beyond the danger that a pork barrel bill would result if Congress were to specify where the money is to be spent, is the insistent question of the basic wisdom in continuing over here an experiment that has not proved successful after long trial in England. The views of the British government were officially expressed in reply to a general inquiry addressed by the secretary general of the League of Nations to all governments.

IN its recent memorandum of reply, the British government cited that they had spent money lavishly since 1919 on projects identical with or very similar to those listed by the President.

"Some idea of the volume of public works carried out," said the official memorandum, "can be obtained from the following figures. The total capital expenditure since 1919 on subsidized housing is well over £700,000,000. About £130,000,000 has been spent in the same period on road schemes, and about £120,000,000 on telephone development. Further substantial expenditures on these services is still being incurred, and, in particular, as regards housing, a national effort is being made at considerable cost to insure a speedy end to the evil of slums. Over the same period, schemes of wide range of types to an estimated cost of £190,000,000 and numbering 17.640 were assisted by grants made by a social committee, the unmployment grants committee. Power to make state grants in the case of this committee has now expired.

"These are merely the major items. Smaller sums have been spent by statutory companies with state aid on the development of their undertakings and by public authorities on land settlement, land drainage, assistance for colonial development, fishery harbors, rural water supply, etc. In addition, considerable sums have also been spent by local authorities and public and other bodies without state assistance, or, in some cases, with state assistance in the form, not of grants, but of guarantees of loans raised to finance the work."

THIS bears a most familiar sound—the New Deal program generally contemplates similar outlays. Here is the conclusion reached by the British government as expressed in this memorandum:

"* * *it is difficult to generalize, since the amount of employment varies considerably as between different schemes; but an examination of a number of individual schemes disclosed that an expenditure of £1,000,000 provided employment for about one year for 4,000 men, including not merely those engaged actually on the work, but also those engaged on the provision of materials, transport, etc., in connection therewith."

"Experience in recent years," continues the memorandum, "in this country has shown that the stimulation of social works selected primarily in respect of their employment-providing capacity has an effect on the employment situation which is small relative to the heavy expenditure incurred, and the works, when completed, leave burdens on national and local finances which impede the recovery of normal activity.

"His majesty's government have on a number of occasions stated their view that the expansion of normal activity will most surely and rapidly be brought about by the creation of confidence by steady policy—in particular, financial confidence by a balanced budget, the lowering of rates of interest with resultant cheap and plentiful capital, and, insofar as government action is possible, by the creation of facilities for and the removal of hindrances to trade.

"PUBLIC works are part of the normal activities of the State and of local and public authorities, and they are continuing, and will continue, in this country subject to the test of their value to the community; but the experiment of large-scale public works as a method of dealing with unemployment has been tried and failed, and it is not intended to be repeated."

In other words, the British found that it cost about $1,200 to put one man to work for a year. It so happens that Mr. Roosevelt's estimate of $4,000,000,000 to provide relief for 3,500,000 men comes to about the same figure—that is, $1,200 paid to 3,500,000 men would amount to $4,200,000,000. Not only did the British conclude that this approach, this attempt, to solve the unemployment problem, had failed, but of particular significance is the conclusion that the real road to recovery is by creation of confidence by steady policy, by bringing the budget under control, by providing plentiful, cheap credit and by removing hindrances to trade.

Surely for an Administration, confronted by much the same basic problems, disposed to draw on the British for comparisons unfavorable to bankers and others on this side, the conclusions can not be without importance—if they are not, in fact, both a warning and a guide for broad policy.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Guilty as Charged.

Prosecutor—Your honor, I submit that the guilt of this defendant has been established and ask for the maximum penalty. A man of this type is beyond consideration. No sympathy can be felt for him in view of the nature of his offense and I ask that an example be made of him.

Counsel—If the court please, my client has not denied his guilt. What he does deny is malicious intent. What he did was done in all innocence and he meant no harm.

Judge—No further remarks by either side are necessary. I have listened carefully to the evidence in this case and have been moved by the testimony given. The accused, in fact, does not deny his guilt and the point is whether extenuating circumstances and the absence of malice entitle him to the mercy of the court. I do not think that absence of malice makes the slightest difference in a case of this category. This is a very serious matter. Tens of thousands of Americans have been the victims of this sort of man. The eyes of the Nation are focused on this court.

Prisoner (to his counsel)—I had no idea this was so serious.

Judge (resuming)—It is my decision that an example must be made of the accused and I find him guilty.

Counsel—On what counts, your honor?

Judge—On all three counts. On Count One, to wit, that he did wilfully remark on innumerable occasions that we do not have old-fashioned winters in this country any more. On Count Two, that he did repeatedly in the presence of many people and without regard to place or circumstances express the opinion that it had something to do with the Gulf Stream.

Prisoner—Your honor, I said very little about the Gulf Stream.

Judge—The evidence shows you were clearly one of those nitwits who have been saving for the last 14 years that the Gulf Stream had changed its course, that it had come closer to the seaboard and that it had materially changed the American climate. I also find you guilty on Count Three.

Prisoner—What was count three? I forget that one.

Judge—That you joined those self-appointed weather experts who said it was all due to spots on the sun.

Prisoner—My conclusions were too hasty. I meant no harm.

Judge—You may have meant no harm, but you and men like you are responsible for thousands of fellow citizens being caught in light underwear, without rubber boots and in no condition to do a good day's snow shoveling. You are not entitled to the slightest mercy and I hereby give you the maximum penalty.

Prisoner—What is the sentence?

Judge (sternly)—Forty years in an unheated cell in your bare feet and at hard labor making weather strips for the commercial market!

THE President's ball was a series of glimpses of famous faces, impressions of diamonds, corsage bouquets, gold braid, noise and crowding.

A tall youth waving a green fountain pen, "Your autograph, Mr. Cantor," "Yours, please, Mr. Penner," and so on . . . Rubinoff practicing behind Barnee's orchestra . . . Phil Baker, "Beetle" and "Bottle" waiting to go on, walking up and down, their hands behind their backs . . . Max Loew wearing the ribbon of "Committee," hurrying hither and yon, looking rather worried . . . A kaleidoscope of celebrities out of the spot light.

Then, just as Rubinoff was set for his solo, the loud speaker cries, "The United States Marine Band!" A bit of martial music, while Rubinoff lowers his bow—a pause, and the music stops. What to do? Rubinoff shakes a vigorous head—the audience gets restless. Cantor steps to the mike and says, "Wonder if Huey Long has anything to do with this?"

More pauses. What will happen next? Rubinoff still shakes his head. There are murmurs of "Cantor," and Eddie steps forward, sings another song.

Rubinoff had the floor to himself after the President's message was heard.

Thaw Waited Today, With Cloudy Skies

A rising temperature will thaw ice and snow in the District today, the Weather Bureau predicted last night. The mercury is expected to be in the low thirties, and the day will be cloudy, forecasters said.

Yesterday's minimum temperature was 12 degrees at 6 a. m. Thermometers rose gradually to a high of 24 at 3 p. m. Washingtonians continued last night to enjoy their winter sports—coasting, sleigh riding and skating in the brisk January air.

History Course Offered.

Salisbury, Md., Jan. 31 (AP).—A course in Maryland history has been offered at the Salisbury State Normal School. Classes will be held in the evenings, starting next Thursday, for the convenience of working people who desire to take the study.

The Frog Man's Act Is Scoring; Penner Obliges

Joe Drops In at Heigh-Ho, Does a Few Antics; Sisters at L'Hiver.

By Kay Ware.

Now that the excitement of the President's ball is over and the Shoreham has returned to normal, patrons of their ballroom can give a little more attention to Ferry, the Frog Man, with an acrobatic fantasy number that is a sure success. Gail Lee, the lady in the sports dress and satin pajamas, does tap dancing; Frederico and Barbara have their own versions of waltz and tango. Incidentally Frederico Chiaroni is a native of Milan, started dancing in Moulin Rouge in Paris and Venice's Lido. Barbara Little is English, daughter of the late George A. Little, designer.

How's Tiny coming along with his "Anything Goes" contest? Hope the results are as good as those for "You're the Top." He and Da Costa share honors in the lounge.

Joe Penner, Mrs. Penner and friends appeared at Heigh-Ho last Wednesday night, and Joe obliged with antics. Ozzie Roberts (versatile gentleman) acted as straight man. Encored, Joe went pathetic with Goo-Goo's serenade, whereupon Artie Humes, trumpeter, nearly fell out of his chair. Laughing, of course.

The Cansinos, by the way, will not leave for another week at least. Devotees of this smooth dance team may rest easy.

Sidney's men continue to please with exclusive numbers. One, "My Heart's On Fire," is slow and dreamy, written by Jack Minovitch and Carl Van Sickler. The other was inspired by Stellita Stapleton, played first at her party and named for her.

The "Heart's on Fire" one was written (lyrics) by an unknown lady. Perhaps she felt the lyrics were too revealing to give her name.

Rumor has it that the songs will be published soon.

Johnny Slaughter departed for New York to get tips for his broadcasts, and the low-down on the metropolis' orchestras. Meanwhile Fritz Manile, Ernestine Gardner and Fenton Froom carry on.

Club L'Hiver has a sister team over there, Fern and Lorraine, who completed a five-week stay at Baltimore's Hi-Hat, and considering the way they're received, they should be at L'Hiver at least as long. Bill Scully and boys are always good, not only for music, but for subtle bits of entertainment as well.

Tonight the Roody Twins open an engagement at Club Habana. Advance notices state that these twins are just "too, too divine." Billy McIntyre, whose engagement lasted so long that we began to think he was one of the boys, left Thursday. Tarrant and Dacita put on new variations of the South American dance theme. Moe Baer and boys are flexible when musical requests are concerned. Sort of a band "for the people," as it were.

If the sight of Child's gone Mexican was too much (Pennsylvania avenue branch) try the soothing effect of Child's gone Colonial. The New York avenue spot calls itself a cocktail lounge, has whips, open fireplaces, harnesses decorating the walls. Jack Melrose, manager, promises a new type of entertainment there soon.

Al Norton, of the Lotus, is pretty busy these days, what with leading the band during Bill Strickland's absence (Bill's vacationing in Florida), playing the bass fiddle, and doing his duty as M. C. However, he manages to find time for a little riding and golf.

Show at Lotus includes a cast of 18, headlined by an eight-girl chorus—five blondes, two brunettes and one redhead.

It's hard to discover how, but Kaleidoscope is one of the most talked-about places in town. Perhaps it's the vivid black-and-white room, decorated with screaming headlines, perhaps the intimate nudist colony, perhaps the absence of cover charge. Anyway, it's a good place for cocktails, dinner, supper, or more cocktails.

Have you made the acquaintance of that maddening game, "Hollywood Rhumba?" It's played with a couple of paddles, a little like the ping-pong variety—and a cork, fitted with feathers. You hit the "birdie" back and forth with the paddles, make up your rules to suit your mood, forget about the crick in your back the next day. He-men take a look, say, "Sissy!" ask for a try, and become addicts. Clinging-vines suddenly develop a strong combative spirit and struggle to get the better of the masculine partner. A beautiful example of the influence of mind over "birdie."

Carleton's a spot for the smart, and a haven for the depressed. A neon fireplace may not look real, but it has fine effects on feminine complexions. Those corner tables are nice too—and so comfortable you can't think of leaving for hours . . . and hours.

Bamboo Room Vocalists

Ernestine Gardner and Fenton Froom share grins while waiting to sing with John Slaughter' Orchestra at the Willard's cocktail spot.

The Federal Diary

(Trade-Mark Applied For.)

By Morgan Baker.

PROTESTING overtime work without pay or leave compensation, the Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists and Technicians of the Department of Agriculture has filed a brief of recommendations with President Roosevelt, Secretary Wallace, Undersecretary Tugwell and the chief of the Bureau of Biological Survey.

BAKER.

The federation charges overtime work without compensation has resulted in outright dismissal of architects and engineers; lowering of the standards of the department's work; establishment of a precedent injurious to other employes, and direct shortening of the period for which these men might be gainfully employed.

"We are also informed," the brief says, "of many irregularities as to the manipulation of the personnel which has permitted discrimination, resulting in:

"Inadequate compensation of many architects and engineers on the basis of particular work done; recommendations of higher ratings for those favored, and the transfer to positions of lower ratings for those discriminated against; and the failure to comply with Rule 12 of the Civil Service regulations relating to removals and reductions."

The federation recommends the following:

"That provision be made for the compensation of overtime, pointing out the precedent established in the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department this year; that the personnel be kept intact for the duration of this work; that the hastened curtailment of employment due to speed-up be stopped immedjately; that discriminating practices affecting personnel be rectified immediately and prohibited in the future; that an enlarged staff be employed sufficient for completing projects on the basis of a 36-40 hour week; that salary ratings be revised to provide adequate compensation according to particular work done; and that funds be made available for the continuation and extension of this project so that the benefits of long term employment shall result."

"A Plan for the Management of Brown Bear in Relation to Other Resources on Admiralty Island, Alaska," is the title of a new booklet by B. F. Heintzleman, assistant regional forester, Alaska Forest Service, and Hugh W. Terhune, executive officer, Alaska Game Commission and chief resident representative of the Bureau of Biological Survey.

ENTERING its fourth year with renewed confidence, the Hospital Guild of Federal Employes Union No. 2 has just submitted its annual report showing benefits many members obtained during the past year. O. B. Bowman, guild president, showed the following letter which is typical of expressions of employe members:

"* * * I wish to go on record as an example as to what may happen most unexpectedly to any one. I had started for Florida with the expectation of recuperating of a severe cold and grippe, and intended to be away not more than two weeks. However, a few days after my arrival I was taken sick with some heart trouble and had to be carried to a hospital where I was for four weeks. Your check, upon my return to Washington, was most welcome, and helped substantially in paying my expenses. V. A. E."

The guild offices are in Suite 604, 710 Fourteenth street northwest.

Diary Guest Tickets.

IF (F), (P) or (C) follows your name in this column, call in person on the Federal Diary editor. You will receive tickets to Loew's Fox (stage, Tim and Irene and other acts; screen, Myrna Loy in "Wings In the Dark"); to Loew's Palace (second week of Gary Cooper, Franchot Tone, Richard Cromwell and cast of thousands in "Lives of a Bengal Lancer") or to Loew's Columbia (Elissa Landi and Cary Grant in "Enter, Madame").

Diary office hours are daily, except Sunday, 12 noon to 1 p. m. and from 4:30 to 6 p. m.; Saturday, 12 noon up to 2:30 p. m.

Senator Pope to Speak Before Chicago Club

Senator J. P. Pope, of Idaho, will speak on "The High Priests of War" before a meeting of the University of Chicago Club at the Admiral, 1640 Rhode Island avenue northwest, Sunday at 6:30 p. m.

Senator Pope was a member of the Senate committee investigating the munitions industry. It was also announced that Judge Fay Bentley, of the Juvenile Court, will be the guest of honor at the supper meeting of the club on February 24.

Local Engineers to Meet.

The annual dinner meeting of the District section of the American Society of Engineers will be held tomorrow night at the Washington Hotel. The national president and secretary will be present.

Militia Seizes 'Crime' County For Kentucky

Bloody Clay Area Taken Over on Laffoon's Order to 'Clean' It Up.

Manchester, Ky., Jan. 31 (AP).—Kentucky National Guardsmen moved speedily and secretly tonight in carrying out an order to "clean up" Clay County, whose bloody history led a Federal investigation to call it "the worst criminal stronghold in the United States."

Descending upon the town in the early morning hours in a surprise move by Gov. Ruby Laffoon to break up an alleged automobile theft ring and end other lawlessness, the troops quickly set up a military rule. Later Circuit Court Judge W. E. Begley abruptly adjourned court to give way to military control.

He declared the county was practically under martial law and that in such cases civil courts have no jurisdiction.

Meanwhile, Brig. Gen. Ellerbe W. Carter, in command, telephoned Adj. Gen. Henry H. Denhardt in Frankfort and was advised that 50 to 100 more troops would be sent in tonight.

More Men Needed, He Says.

"I thought that a good idea so they could go ahead and clean the whole place up," Gen. Carter explained later. The troops spent the day in small squads searching the county and brought in 14 cars, listed as stolen, but made no arrests. Gen. Carter said more men were needed to expedite this work.

Judge Begley's action followed refusal of Gen. Carter, in command of 100 National Guardsmen and 35 State police, to permit Sheriff T. C. McDaniel to arrest Clyde Jones, a State policeman, on two indictments. The judge said that when troops refuse to turn over a man to the civil courts that, in effect, amounts to martial law. He went to Gen. Carter, got a military pass, required for any one leaving the county, and left for his home at London, in adjacent Laurel County.

Jones was indicted here by the January grand jury on charges of house breaking and grand larceny after he had reported he had spotted approximately 40 stolen automobiles. He did not return to Manchester until the troops came in today. Sergt. D. W. Moore, in charge of the guard detail, kept Jones close by him today.

Warrant Service Prevented.

Gen. Carter, who this morning in response to a reporter's question had replied "not technically" when asked whether the county was under martial law, declined today to permit Sheriff McDaniel to serve warrants on Jones.

Except for tenseness when Sheriff McDaniel sought to serve the warrants on State Policeman Jones to take him to court for trial, the townspeople who had flocked into the public square on arrival of the troops had remained quiet.

"All the excitement you'll see is among the soldiers," was the comment from County Attorney William Rice. He said Sheriff McDaniel had aided "insurance adjusters" in finding 17 stolen automobiles, in the past few months. He declared local officials had ceased to cooperate with State police. As the reason, he asserted the latter had come in, stopped drivers anywhere and if the numbers on a car indicated it had been stolen, they had seized it and left no record.

Ordered to Clean Up County.

The soldiers dashed into the county under orders from the Governor and Adjt. Gen. Denhardt. They were told to clean up the county, which Denhardt said a Federal investigator recently termed "the worst criminal stronghold in the United States." Denhardt said they were to "break up an automobile theft gang headed by a prominent official and backed by another official."

Field equipment machine guns and nausea gas were brought by the expedition, mobilized at dawn today with its destination unannounced.

The column of 13 militia trucks and half dozen of State police automobiles rolled into town soon after dawn. The men had been issued ammunition on the way. They met a quiet reception, formed in the main public square and set up Carter's headquarters in a hotel. Military operators took over the telephone exchange for a time, but later released it.

Guard details set to patrolling the county, which is a sparsely settled area with only 18,000 inhabitants.

Denhardt's charges are the second by a State official in the last two years of Clay County's bloody history.

Nothing But the Truth

JOLLY COBURN, orchestra leader at the Rockefeller Rainbow Room atop Radio City, names the six most sartorially correct men in America: (1) William Rhinelander Stewart, (2) John S. Young, (3) Ed Sullivan, (4) Conrad Nagel, (5) George Vanderbilt, jr., (6) Arthur Hand.

NOTHING But the Truth: Coburn didn't intend to include me in the listing until Peggy Hopkins Joyce insisted: You can't leave out Sullivan," she said, "he's got a pair of shoulders like a heavyweight champion, and besides, he's a pal of mine." So that's how I got in.

• • • •

A reader wants to know why I described Rosalind Kress as the heiress to the Kresge 5-and-10 millions: "Both the Kress family and the Kresge family operate chain stores," writes the indignant subscriber. "I dare you to admit honestly that you didn't know the distinction between the two families."

NOTHING But the Truth: As a matter of fact, I didn't know. But what does it matter so long as she's wealthy?

• • • •

Here's an N. B. T. T. item from Elsie Lewis, 59 Barkley avenue, Clifton, N. J.: "Dear Ed. Heard Jack Denny play a violin on his Sunday program. When you meet Jack, tell him to change his name to Nero, because while he fiddles, we burn."

• • • •

E. M. Counts, of the Billinghurst Hotel, Detroit, asks three questions. He wants to know why I use such an expression as "The Rollo Peters are in town," when it should be the Rollo Peterses; (2) he wants to know why I use such an expression as "Durante is plenty peeved," with plenty used as an adverb; (3) he wants to know why I boast of scoops, saying that this practice leaves him cold as a malamute's nose.

Mr. Counts, nothing but the truth: (1) I shy away from "Peterses" because it sounds clumsy to me; (2) I use "plenty" because it always seems more expressive than "very;" (3) I boast of scoops because of the "ham" in me.

• • • •

Nothing but the truth: The Rockettes, precision dancers at Radio City Music Hall, are the best bet in the city for entertainment . . . Of the 600 ballroom dance teams in the profession, only five of them are worth watching; the rest are terrible . . . The mink-coated women from New York, who have rushed to Flemington, N. J., to see the Hauptmann trial, have received a great deal of abuse . . . I don't see why they should be berated, for it is well worth a visit . . . All but this paper attacked John McCooey's appointment of his son as a Brooklyn judge . . . McCooey has proved a splendid jurist, and I don't think that he has had a single reversal of one of his decisions . . . Poderjay, extradited from Austria in the Agnes Tufverson case, startled even Assistant Chief Inspector John Sullivan at police headquarters by his effeminacies . . . The reason the Folies Bergeres clicked on Broadway is because it offered something different . . . People are fed up with the trite, old-fashioned night club routines.

WALTER READE, in case you don't know, is a Broadway theater owner with a reputation for terse and truthful answers. . . . his theater holdings include a chain of houses along the Jersey shore, and just recently the Red Bank Chamber of Commerce sent him the following letter:

"Dear Mr. Reade: We have been informed that feature pictures are not shown in Red Bank until 14 days after the release in Asbury Park, and seven days after being released in Long Branch. We wonder, if our information is correct, whether or not this can be corrected so as to assure our local theater a simultaneous opening. Very truly yours,

JOHN P. G. McPHEE,
Red Bank Chamber of Commerce.

Reade's answer fits into this "Nothing But the Truth" column, and I reprint it from the pages of the Monmouth American:

"Dear Sweetheart: I am too busy to explain to every sucker in the world why pictures play here and why pictures play there. If you want to find out, go into the picture business. Love and kisses,

WALTER READE.

Triboro Bridge Commissioner George V. McLaughlin was toastmaster at the testimonial dinner tendered Capt. John J. McCloskey at Coney Island's Half-Moon Hotel on Tuesday night, an affectionate salute to "Black Jack" from a community which he had served on the police force for 43 years. It was a magnificent tribute to the veteran who had been retired recently. The brilliant McLaughlin, Police Commissioner Lewis J. Valentine, George G. Tilyou, jr., Chief Inspector John Seery, Inspector Ryan, Inspector Donavan and others were on the dais.

Hon. William F. X. Geoghan offered a Nothing But the Truth speech: "It is too bad," he said, "that this man, physically strong, mentally alert, must be retired because of rules." That is so. Retirement rules are wrong in that they test a man's legs, instead of his brains.

'Supreme Court of the People' May Have Its Birth in Arkansas

Little Rock, Ark., Jan. 31 (AP).—Arkansas' House of Representatives today approved an invitation to Secretary Wallace to come to Little Rock and explain his proposed "economic supreme court of the people," indicating a tentative willingness to make this State a clinic for Federal experiments in economics and new departure in government.

Indorsing the clinical idea in principle by adopting a resolution offered by Representative Leo E. Nyberg, of Helena, the House put itself on record as promising "if deemed proper" that "this Legislature may extend to the proper Federal agencies all enabling legislation that would grant to the people of the State of Arkansas the opportunity to avail themselves of all the benefits such a plan may afford." The resolution was sent to the Senate.

Representative Nyberg, managing editor of the Daily World in his home town of Helena, told the chamber:

"This resolution puts Arkansas on record as being the first State to take steps to let the people really rule."

Should Arkansas offer herself as a proving ground for the Wallace proposal, all ideas affecting "the economic needs of the people" would be checked direct to a vote of the people, whose majority decision would be law.

Mrs. Schuyler Becomes Bride Of E. D. Millikin

Widow of Former Senator From Colorado Weds in London.

Washington society will be interested in the marriage of Mrs. Alsena Schuyler, widow of Mr. Karl C. Schuyler, former Senator from Colorado, and Mr. Eugene D. Millikin, of Denver, Colo., former law partner of the Senator. The wedding took place Wednesday in London, England. The couple had kept the plans for the wedding secret and friends of the bride did not know she was abroad until the marriage was announced.

The bride left last fall for a cruise form California and passed the last two months in Florida and New York. She sailed the middle of January and remained in Paris until early this week. She was joined there by Mr. Millikin, who had been in Italy since mid-December.

The bride, the former Miss Alsena Shepherd, was married to Mr. Schuyler in Colorado Springs in 1905. She has been active socially in Denver for many years and was a popular member of society during the years she spent in Washington. Mr. Schuyler died in August, 1933, from injuries in an automobile accident in New York City.

Mr. Milliken is well known in business and club circles. He attended the University of Colorado. He served in France during the World War and was commissioned lieutenant colonel of infantry. Later he became associated with Senator Schuyler in his legal practice.

It is understood the couple will remain abroad several weeks and will return to Denver in the spring.

Count De Brantes And Wife to Sail

Couple to Visit in California on Wedding Trip.

The Count and Countess Louis de Brantes, who have been in New York for a brief visit, will sail tomorrow on the Santa Rosa for San Francisco. They are on their wedding trip.

The countess was formerly Lady Moira Forbes, daughter of the Earl and Countess of Granard, and a niece of the former Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Ogden L. Mills. The wedding took place December 20 at the estate of the bride's parents in Ireland.

U.S. Adherence to Arbitration Principles Forecast Despite World Court Defeat

Mrs. Walbridge Visions Peace By Education

Defense Parley Delegate Was Cited for Bravery by Pershing.

ALTHOUGH the proposal for United States adherence to the World Court was recently rejected by the Senate, this country will continue to adhere to the fundamental principles of arbitration. This faith was expressed yesterday by Mrs. Robert Walbridge, former national president of the American Legion Auxiliary, who is attending the sessions of the Women's Patriotic Conference at the Mayflower.

"World peace through amicable means," declared the dark-eyed parliamentarian of the present conference, "will be brought about primarily through education. It is this approach through the efforts of combined patriotic organizations that is making settlement of world-wide questions an easier matter than formerly."

Mrs. Walbridge, who as Irene McIntyre received along with her sister Gladys two citations from Gen. Pershing for bravery during the World War, believes there is too much emphasis today of the differences between patriotic organizations. Thirty-nine of these are represented at the present conference.

All Seek Same End.

"They all have the same ultimate aim, that of world peace," she said yesterday. "Some may lean a little more toward militaristic defense than others. It is all a matter of opinion as to what constitutes protection and what provocation. Each employs a little different means toward the same end, but one means will not suffice. Every means must be employed to maintain peace and all can be incorporated into a single effective program.

Mrs. Walbridge, who is a single girl of 23, left for France in 1917 under the auspices of the Salvation Army, is one of the real heroines of the patriotic conference. With her sister, Gladys McIntyre, she went into the front-line trenches with the first American troops.

Serving with 12 of the American divisions, the two girls were the first welfare workers in the Argonne offensive. Moving with the troops from one war-torn sector to another, they set up huts and served doughnuts and coffee as well as other appetizing foods to the troops.

Lent a Hand at Nursing.

Irene and Gladys were caught in the first engagement of the American troops, the attack of Seicheprey, a point on the American front where the Americans suffered severe losses. Unharmed themselves, they lent a hand at nursing and ambulance service between canteen duties.

Would she volunteer such service again in case of another war? Mrs. Walbridge smiled and intimated she would.

"I doubt, however," she said, "if I could operate as efficiently and as coolheadedly as I did at 23. I think probably that youth and inexperience are big factors toward emotional control and efficient operation in a nerve-racking crisis like the last war. Older women, whose nerves were not so steady under fire, were kept in stationary positions by the relief corps. The young and unattached were allowed to face the hazards."

Mrs. Walbridge and her sister spent weeks in dugouts with bullets whizzing about them. The fact that they had never left their posts under fire, resulted in the citations for bravery.

Married Veteran of A. E. F.

After the war the girls were given their choice of accompanying the Army of Occupation into Germany or remaining with the last troops on the battle-scarred front. They chose the less attractive latter course, feeling they could contribute a more humane service there.

One of five members of the same family (including her sister, her father and two brothers) to serve overseas, Mrs. Walbridge returned to her home in New Hampshire only to culminate a war romance. She married Lieut. Robert Walbridge, whom she had met on the battlefield in France. They have two adopted children, a boy, 3, and a girl, aged 10 months.

"Should we ever be so unfortunate as to have another war," concluded Mrs. Walbridge, "as much as I love this little son of mine, I could not insist upon his staying home. I feel I would have no right to ask another to serve in his place."

Underwood & Underwood.

A veteran of the French battle front, where she served doughnuts and coffee to soldiers in dugouts, Mrs. Robert Walbridge believes that peace can be achieved by education coupled with adequate defense.

Strictly Speaking

Try These.

1. Is Anna Roosevelt's new name properly called BOT-ti-ger, BOT-ti-jer or BO-ti-jer?
2. Define and pronounce macilent.
3. Why is a waterproof outer garment called a mackintosh?
4. What type of verse form is the terza rima? How is it pronounced?

Check Here.

1. Boettiger is properly called BOW-ti-ger. The first syllable rhymes with "slow," and the last, with "her." The "g" is hard as in "get."
2. Lean; thin. Pronounced MAS-i-lent.
3. Because Charles Macintosh (1766-1843) was the inventor.
4. The terza rima (TER-tza REE-ma) is a scheme of continuous verse (usually iambic pentameter) arranged in tercets in which line 2 of each rhymes with 1 and 3 of the next.

What Today Means

"Aquarius."

IF FEBRUARY 1 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 11 a. m. to 1 p. m., from 3 to 5 p. m. and from 8 to 10 p. m. The danger periods are from 9 to 11 a. m., from 5 to 7 p. m. and from 10 p. m. until midnight.

If you allow a pet aversion on this February 1 to influence your decision as to a line of action affecting someone else, you may later on regret it. A broad-minded outlook will probably be needed for success in business transactions. Anything resembling high financing will possibly later on result in complications, so be careful not to try manipulation in money matters. This should be a very good day for securing cooperation in the starting of some new business or social activity.

This is also an auspicious day for the carrying out of new ideas, especially if they relate to club or social organization affairs. Matters in which affection of love is involved should be easily handled, and any wishes pertaining to them will probably be realized. Married and engaged couples, as well as those being kept on love's anxious seat, will run a better chance of having their wishes granted if they refrain from appearing overly impatient.

If a women and February 1 is your birthday, you are perhaps inclined to day dream when important matter require that you should be wide awake, so it might be advantageous to curb this trait. The quicker you learn to have a high regard for time and that many times it is more valuable than money, the better off you may become. Alertness is all you need to enable you to become a great success either socially or in business. Drawing, writing, teaching, bookkeeping and stenography offer vocational pursuits, anyone of which should assure you of a livable income.

The child born on February 1, as soon as it arrives at school age, must be taught the art of centering its attention on whatever work or thing it is doing. Mentally, as well as physically, it should be all that could be desired. There should be little or no difficulty encountered training it to do the proper thing.

If a man and February 1 is your natal day, you should refrain from anything of a highly speculative or will-o'-the-wisp type of venture, for it will probably be through you own individual efforts that most satisfactory results will come Law, medicine, journalism, art and various industrial lines offer you great money-making opportunities. You should find both peace and happiness through marriage.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I am not in the habit of writing letters to be published, but after reading "Eleanor's" problem last night (Tuesday, January 29), I felt that I must try to save her from the unhappiness which I have experienced.

* * * *

"Eleanor," if you marry that spoiled mother's boy you will regret it as long as you live. Wait until a man comes along who is not tied to his mother's apron strings. No matter what promises he makes before marriage, you may be sure they will not be kept. His mother will see to that.

* * * *

I know, because I married a man like that. His mother was not satisfied until she made him break up our home and go live with her. But he went alone. I went to the divorce courts.

* * * *

Please take the advice of one who, though six years younger than yourself, knows what life can be under circumstances similar to the ones you describe. He will not change and you will only know misery as long as you are married to him. Forget him now. You will have to, sooner or later.

* * * *

Miss Haworth, please do not publish my true name or address, which I am giving you in case "Eleanor" should care to get in touch with me. JACQUELINE.

Only Unhappiness Ahead.

DEAR JACQUELINE: Certainly your experience endorses my own belief, clearly stated to "Eleanor," that the woman who marries a mother-dominated man is signing away her hopes of happiness, preparing for herself a bed of thorns, and walking into a life of merciless martydom, all in the name of love. It just isn't worth it.

* * * *

I have no doubt a great many generous-minded men and women who have never experienced nor observed at first hand the working out of one of these ugly triangles in human relationships, will think that an unfair, unjustified and dogmatic pronouncement. They will see no reason why an intelligent, understanding, sympathetic, unselfish wife can not in time achieve an adequate, if not complete, victory over a domineering, possessive mother-in-law.

* * * *

However, the only means whereby a husband and wife may hope to achieve a fundamental and indestructible married relatedness, is to lock and bar the doors of their united life against malicously interfering intruders until they have developed some kinship of spirit. The first few years in marriage are the most important, so far as building an enduring relationship is concerned. And that is why it is unreasonable to suppose that by enduring this man's mother's interference now, "Eleanor" could hope to minimize its effects later.

* * * *

She might, at long last, obtain some sort of victory over her mother-in-law, attain to some sort of lifeless peace, but it could be only after her interest in the issue was dead. She would have sacrificed her spirit on an empty altar.

Superiority Complex Is Held By Modern Women as Result Of Success in Business World

By Malvina Lindsay
(Woman's Page Editor).

BACK in the infancy of the woman's rights movement, the more dour prophets saw a future world peopled with effeminate browbeaten men and aggressive, square-jawed Amazons. These prophecies, of course, failed to materialize. But today we have a faintly disturbing reminder of them.

* * * *

Not only has the sweet, wistful hero come into vogue in novels, plays and drawing room solrees, but the well-dressed man, we learn, now has his individual perfume—something very pungent and invigorating of course—but still a perfume. Even more to the point is the controversy that has recently arisen over the bumptiousness of the modern woman.

* * * *

The crisp, ultra-efficient woman of the business and professional world and the consciously casual one of the society drawing room are affording foreign visitors food for discussion and material for magazine articles. They are also causing many men to complain bitterly that American women are getting hard-boiled.

ANYONE who has ever dealt with a business woman of the nouveau successful type, or a feminine propagandist with a Catherine the Great complex, or a society hostess aping the indifference of a Harvard undergraduate or the blowsy camaraderie of a British horseman would be inclined to agree that women were becoming increasingly unpleasant and ill bred.

* * * *

And while all women can not be indicted for the behavior of a few, it is apparent to other observers than a few disgruntled men that the metallic type of femininity is gaining in vogue—even despite the return of poke bonnets. More and more does one detect the glint of the machine in the eye of the woman who has succeeded—or who fancies herself a success.

* * * *

This personality development in the business world is the fruit of about 30 years of struggle for an economic foothold. In view of the progress woman has made in the face of terrific handicaps, she may be justified in rather childishly feeling superior. And certainly the hard-boiled pose had greatly simplied living for her. She can now dispense with the niceties and subtle considerations that women were expected to carry with them from the parlor to the office. Nothing so saves time and energy as curtness and indifference. Nothing is so easy on the brain as to sink into self-absorption.

THE feminine propagandist, however, may find the flinty personality a handicap. In fact, many worthy feminine causes would be greatly aided by a little more humanness on the part of their leaders. The coldly superior rightness of many a modern crusader and her "impatience with stupidity" pose have turned prospective followers from causes that were badly in need of the warm fanaticism of a Joan of Arc. Whatever weaknesses of sentimentality or bigotry the old-time woman reformer may have possessed, she at least campaigned on a basis of motherly fervor rather than of arrogant logic.

* * * *

The hard-boiled woman in so far as she does exist represents nothing more serious than a fashion in personality. Social and economic forces have contributed to her making, but in even greater degree she is the product of her own theatricalism. Always woman has readily changed her role to fit her background. In the later eighteenth century she was a genteel swooner. In the middle nineteenth she was a lachrymose piner. In the nineties she was a mild rebel, in the early twentieth century an earnest crusader, in the twenties a play girl, and now, perhaps, an acidulous robot.

* * * *

Today's curtness is as much a pose as was yesterday's sentimentality and the day before yesterday's helplessness. The woman who answers the telephone with a short "Well?" is playing a part quite as much as the one who once treated all office boys with an "Oh you wonderful man!" attitude. Only the one is drawing a little more intelligently on the feminine wisdom of the ages. That fact today's unconquerables may some day learn.

Greater Beauty For Building Designs Urged

A CAN OPENER can hold more charm and be more beautiful than a church if its design is perfectly fitted to its purpose, George James Cox, professor of art at the University of California, is convinced. Too often churches and civic buildings are planned and constructed by "materialists devoid alike of ethics and esthetics," Prof. Cox said recently in an address at Long Beach, Calif.

It would be a good thing, he said, if every sky sign, neon light, street lamp, telegraph pole and what not gave forth a noise equivalent in intensity to its visual poverty and squalor.

"There should be such a pandemonium that we would be forced to do something about it," Prof. Cox said.

"The factory, packing house, railway station, theater and school can be fine manifestations of the human spirit," he added. "Some of those now coming into being may not be as grand and inspiring as old cathedrals but they give heartening evidence that we are gradually emerging from the squalor of the industrial age."

Guide Reveals Ways to Buy Cotton Goods

(Associated Press.)

THE average housewife during 1935 will buy an average of 60 yards of cotton goods in some form for each member of the family, says the Consumers' Guide, a bi-weekly publication of the Consumers Counsel of AAA. But how can she tell she is getting good cotton? Cotton that will wear, cotton in which the color will last, a cotton that will not shrink?

Many of the fabrics now on the market bear labels which will help. The Consumers' Guide has issued advance on how to evaluate the labels and the fabrics.

First, says the Guide, choose cotton with the longest fibers. Unravel the edges and find out how long the fibers are. The shortest are about one-half inch, the longest about two inches. Very short fibers tend to make weak yarns. Sheets made of short fibers have a fuzzy appearance after laundering.

Fiber Length a Factor.

The fiber length is known as the "staple." Cotton sometimes is described as short, medium or long staple. Better grades of sheeting are made of medium or long staple. The woman who likes novelty weaves often pays for it in the wearing quality. A plain weave produces a fabric with the best wearing quality.

Here are a few of the common weaknesses in construction of cotton fabrics: (a) Very fine yarns woven over very heavy ones soon wear through. (b) Long yarns, or "floats," passed over too many yarns in the weave are easily caught and torn. (c) Designs produced by weaving short lengths free at both ends may cause the fabric to look shabby quickly.

When buying cotton ask about the thread count, the guide advises. That means the number of threads to the inch-length across the fabric and lengthwise. Low thread count often is the reason behind low price and short wear. Examine the material by holding it up to the light to see if the count is about the same both ways. Sizing is important. This is the starch or other material used to give the fabric a smooth finish. Much of it may conceal a poorly woven fabric. "Pure finish" stamped on a sheet means the minimum amount of sizing has been used.

Sizing and Mercerizing.

Don't confuse sizing with mercerizing. That is a process which gives a glossier finish to cotton fabrics. It adds both to attractiveness and to durability.

Dyeing is one of the important finishing processes. No dye yet discovered will remain permanently "fast" under all conditions. Some cotton is marked "washable." Find out if it means the cotton will not shrink.

Sometimes cotton fabrics bear the label, "conforms to United States commercial standard CS33-32." This means that the manufacturers of that type of garment have agreed on uniform basic dimensions for each size. Such garments are not tested by the Government. The label simply refers to a trade agreement.

Girls Adopting New Costumes For All Uses

Ensemble Is Suitable for Bedroom, Beach or Boulevard.

CHICAGO, Jan. 31 (AP).—Costumes for bedroom, beach or boulevard are possibilities in a new seven-in-one combination for warm-weather wear. This is a novel outgrowth of last summer's dual purpose feminine outfits—the play suit which became a sports frock with addition of a separate skirt.

This new compressed wardrobe consists of shorts, wrap-around skirt, polo-style blouse, long pajama top, trousers, halter and robe, in seersucker and checks, trimmed in brown, red, green and blue.

The shorts and polo blouse result in a play-suit for bicycling or tennis. Add the skirt and there's a sport frock. The halter, shorts and skirt give a sun-tan back dress. The new long pajama top may be worn, Hollywood fashion, over a bathing suit. The halter plus the trousers is a smart beach costume, and then, of course, there's the pajama top and trousers combination, and also the robe, for lounging.

Shorts appear, judging from resort fashions, to be booked for a big season again. They are better designed for wearability. Many are longer. In fact, some come to the knees. They come in linen, jersey, both silk and wool, and numerous cotton weaves.

Cotton demin is important style news. From the realm of rough hard labor that stout blue fabric of overalls has come into the fashion for clothes for playtime hours. It is one of the newer materials used in shorts, slacks and blouses.

The calf-length divided skirt, the culotte, has caught on. Frequently the skirt is of white or natural colored linen and the shirt of jersey in a solid color—brown, navy or red. Slacks appear definitely to have replaced beach pajamas.

Covered Wooden Bridge Doomed.

One of the few old covered wooden bridges remaining in this section of the country will soon be replaced by a modern concrete structure. Situated at Philippi, W. Va., the old bridge was the scene of many a battle between Confederate and Union soldiers in the Civil War.

Shorts to Be Worn Generally in 1935

Chicago, Jan. 31 (AP).—You're going to be seeing quite a bit of the athletic girls this summer.

V. R. McMillan, vice president of the National Sporting Goods Distributors Assocation, today predicted they would wear shorts for virtually everything but dinner, dancing and church services. He stated:

"We believe shorts will be accepted as the proper costume for the beach, picnic, golfing, tennis, cycling, hiking and even for the home.

"You couldn't stop them if you wanted to."

Women Voters To Mail Plea For Reforms

Permanent Trained Personnel and Tax Readjustment Are Sought.

MORE THAN 10,000 letters addressed to national and State legislators and other officials will be sent out today by the National League of Women Voters and its State and local branches declaring that American life is "seriously menaced" unless there is permanent trained personnel in government and tax readjustments to provide needed revenues for essential government services.

The league pledges itself to united and continuous effort for the next two years to action designed to bring to government service standards of professional quality and to effect reorganization of local, State and national tax systems. It believes essential government activities can not be carried on without increased revenue which necessitates a complete readjustment of the tax system.

Conference Adjourns Today.

AT the final session of the tenth Women's Patriotic Conference today at the Mayflower Hotel the Rev. Edmund A. Walsh, vice president of Georgetown University, will discuss the ethics of national defense. Brig. Gen. Richard P. Williams, United States Marine Corps; Maj. Gen. George E. Leach, chief of the National Guard Bureau, and Constantine Brown, journalist, will also speak.

Mrs. G. L. H. Brosseau, of Greenwich, Conn., former president general of the D. A. R., will offer resolutions expressing the attitude of the delegates to the questions discussed by the speakers. Officers for the 1936 conference will be elected at a meeting of the extension committee, following adjournment.

"Among Women" Program.

THE District of Columbia Federation of Women's Clubs will present Miss Mary Sue Tynes, office assistant and director of girls' activities of the Florence Crittenton Home, during the "Among Women" radio program at 1:15 o'clock today from Station WRC.

Mrs. George Oliver Gillingham, of the federation's radio committee, will introduce Miss Tynes, who will speak on "A Glimpse Into the Florence Crittenton Home."

Nature and art lovers are invited to attend the exhibit of original water colors by Florence C. Estabrook from 1 to 6 o'clock today and tomorrow at the studio of the League of American Pen Women in the Burlington Hotel, 1120 Vermont avenue northwest.

"Experience in Getting Facts" will be the subject of John F. Howland's talk before the members of the National Genealogical Society at 8:15 o'clock tomorrow at the Y. W. C. A.

Georgia Bill Plans Alimony From Wives

Measure Is Supported by Only Woman in Assembly.

ATLANTA, Jan. 31 (AP).—Hereafter husbands may draw alimony from their wives in Georgia if legislation being prepared by Representative H. B. Edwards, of Valdosta, is enacted by the General Assembly. Edwards announced today he was drawing such a bill and hoped to present it to the House of Representatives Monday. He has the support of at least one of Georgia's women in the person of Mrs. Helen W. Coxon, of Long County, only woman member of the 1935 General Assembly.

"I believe in fair play," she said in reference to that section of the proposal relating to alimony for husbands in case title to the family's property is in the possession of the wife.

Women's Vote Swings Elections in Texas

Role of "King Maker" Is Preferred There, Says Marjorie Watson.

THE most political minded State in the Union so far as women are concerned is Texas. While the woman vote commands a certain respect in other sections of the country it actually makes or breaks candidates in the Lone Star State.

At least that's the way the situation strikes Marjorie Watson. And Miss Watson knows the ins and outs of politics. She's been in the thick of them ever since she left college a dozen or so years ago. A direct descendant of Sam Houston, she has Texas as well as politics in her blood. She helped lead her State in its fight for repeal of prohibition, marshaled anti-Klan forces, and was the first woman deputy treasurer Texas ever had—or any other State for that matter.

Now Marjorie Watson is in Washington, has been for a year, and there's a saying around town that she's gotten more jobs in the Capital for Texans than any other one person. Women Democrats in her State were instrumental in sending her here. And while her official job consists in looking after arts and crafts displays in the works division of the FERA, she has come to be pretty much of a power behind the scenes.

Prefer to Be King Makers.

That suits Marjorie Watson. It's in keeping with the ambition of Texas women to be king makers rather than kings, she explained yesterday.

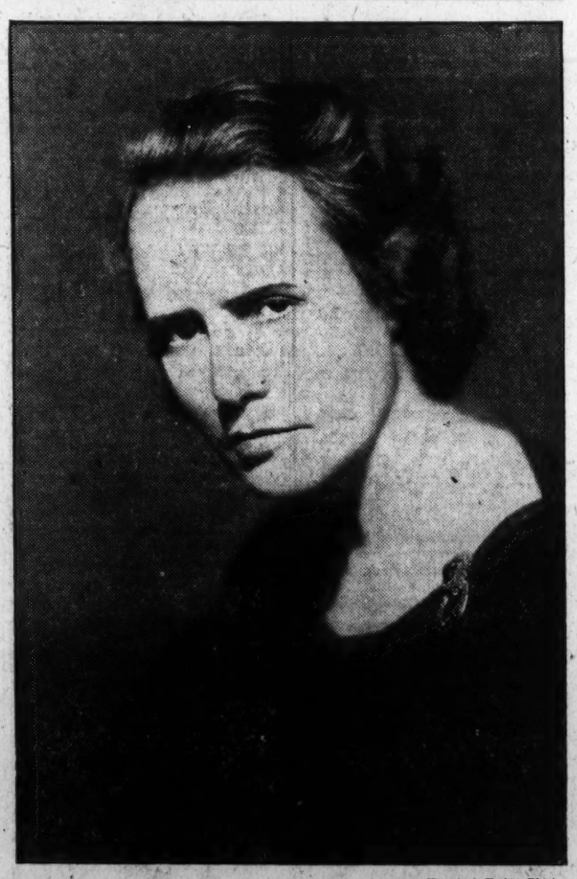
"In my State," she continued, "Junior Leaguers and other socially prominent women take an active part in politics. They may not run for office themselves, but they have a good deal to say about who will run their State and who will represent them in Washington. In other words, it's fashionable in Texas to be actively interested in public affairs."

Her statement about Texas women preferring to be the power behind the throne brought up rumors Marjorie Watson will run for Congress; rumors which have been circulating for years.

The descendant of Sam Houston smiled at the question and gave an equivocal answer to the effect that she loves her district too much to run against a man who is powerful enough to be chairman of the Judiciary Committee. In other words it evidently depends upon what happens to Hatton Sumners in 1936 whether or not Marjorie Watson will seek the nomination for Congress from Texas' Fifth District.

Meanwhile the tall, brown-eyed young woman from Dallas is following closely the goings-on in the Capital. As an ardent New Dealer she can't get excited over a few political plums being handed out to Republicans.

"In normal times I firmly believe that to the victors belong the spoils," she said. "But these are unusual times and unusual methods must be used. I do think, however, that every appointment should carry the approval of the appointee's Senator and Representative."



Harris & Ewing Photo.

Politics and Texas are the ruling interests in the life of Marjorie Watson, of Dallas, above. A direct descendant of Sam Houston, she has made a speech in every county in Texas at some time or other on political issues. Now she is in Washington with the FERA.

"Viva, Mexico!" Bazaar's Echo In Store Here

Display Transports the Onlooker Thousands of Miles Away.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

WHEN YOU STAND in front of the Bazaar Mexicano, an outstanding feature in a local store, it's as though you were thousands of miles from Washington. It's as though you had suddenly and magically been transported to the old market square in a Mexican village. The tiled roof, the brilliantly colored display of pottery, glassware, jewelry, and other Mexican products, the two strikingly brunette salesgirls dressed in dazzling red, all these make F street seem strangely distant.

With such a wealth of wares in front of you it's difficult to know where to look first. There is of course a real Mexican sombrero, and a gaudy blanket. Past these, perchance, you'll notice a strange pineapple-shaped water jug. This, made from closely packed pottery, is excellent for keeping water cool and fresh for many hours.

Plaques Catch the Eye.

And then there are the fascinating wall plaques. One in particular is liable to catch your eye because of its amazing combination of colors. There is cerise, deep yellow, red, rose, green, blue and brown all employed to depict a Mexican landscape.

The native potters of Tonalo are well represented by an altogether unique and interesting display of pottery. There are jugs, vases, queer little sombrero-shaped ash trays, and odd banks. These are molded in the shape of tropical fruits. In each is a small slit for coins, but strangely enough no way of taking them out. It seems when they're filled you break the bank.

Hand-blown glass decanters, vases and glasses of all descriptions will loosen your purse strings considerably. It's not only difficult but almost impossible to resist these delightful bubbly tidbits.

And hear ye, hear ye, not only will you find a wide variety of unusual merchandise, but you'll realize immediately the prices are phenomenally intriguing.

Blousette Prices Reduced.

If you hurry there might still be time to pick up a bargain blouse—or blousette, as it's called. In a downtown store there is a table given over to these. The sign over it informs you that blousettes once priced at 59 cents are down to 39 cents, those for a $1 now 59 cents, and the ones which sold for $1.67 are only 99 cents.

If you reach there before they are gone you'll find cottons and taffetas in plaids, stripes, prints, solids, and many metal trimmed.

To Strengthen the Eyes.

Found—In the midst of a myriad of bottles—one which seemed to say, "My glory is somewhat overshadowed for the moment by these creams and those lotions. But I'm a reliable friend of all. I strengthen and brighten the eyes. I'm a sure cure for eye strain. You can always depend on me."

There is no need for a bottle to speak. The young lady behind the counter has eloquence to spare. She explained that this was an eye bath. It is made of chemically pure and safe ingredients dissolved in distilled water. She said it was one of the most scientifically prepared products on the market, and excellent for use over or in the eyes.

When you notice that your eyes are dull and tired try a bit of this. Put some of it on an especially prepared eyepad, lie back in your easy chair, and place the pad over your eyes. In a short while your eyes will feel rested, and when you next peer into the mirror you'll see they are bright and rested looking.

At this same counter you may also buy the eyepads, which are only 10 cents each.

Cleansing Cream Offered.

A certain well-known cosmetician is celebrating the early part of the new year by offering a small jar of her very excellent cleansing cream with every box of her face powder.

The face powder needs no description. It has a fine texture, and comes in several soft well-blended shades. The cream which is given away with it is liquefying. It purges the pores of make-up and grime and dust and frees your face of those impurities which cause blackheads.

Both of these for $1.10.

Boucle Suits Favorites.

Boucle suits are all-year-round favorites. They look nice winter, summer, spring and fall, and they are suited to a variety of occasions. At present you will find an interesting assortment of these suits in a downtown store for a very interesting price—$5.88.

They come in several styles and in blue, yellow, green, rose and rust. Buy one now and enjoy it the rest of the year!

How to Keep Well

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

False Security in Colds.

APPARENTLY there have developed some misconceptions as to the role of vitamins. The importance of these peculiar substances to many body functions has been demonstrated beyond question.

If existing disease is due to a vitamin deficiency, supplying the needed vitamin is usually followed by spectacular improvement. Nevertheless, they are not cure-alls, and because we feel out of sorts we must not assume that we have a vitamin deficiency and that the taking of cod liver oil or some other substance rich in vitamins will relieve our symptoms.

Within the last few years considerable attention has been directed to the possible cold-preventive function of vitamin A. It was thought to have great protective value in infections of the mucous membrane. Recently published data by competent observers, however, indicate that vitamin A added to normal diet of young adults does not reduce the incidence of the common cold.

A most significent report has just been issued by G. S. Shibley and T. D. Spies of their work with 240 adult volunteers. To a portion of this group was given vitamin A for a period beginning January, 1933, and ended in March, 1934. The vitamin was given in the form of halibut liver oil, and the doses were administered at weekly intervals, somewhat in excess of the usual amount.

The volunteers were divided at random into three groups, only one-third of the entire number receiving vitamin A. All the volunteers were carefully observed during the progress of the experiment and a cold was diagnosed whenever the symptoms of nasal or throat irritation appeared.

In the total group during the period 753 colds were recorded and each cold lasted on the average approximately 12 days. As would be expected, there were more colds in the winter than during the summer.

The results of the entire experiment indicate that the feeding of vitamin A, in addition to that found in the diet of the average young adult, did not reduce the number of colds—all three groups having colds in practically the same proportion. Furthermore, the colds in the vitamin taking individuals were as severe as those in the other groups, though the duration was somewhat shorter.

The exact nature of the common cold has not as yet been accurately determined. There are, no doubt, factors thta have to do with the onset of colds other than the presence of bacteria or infective virus coupled with fatigue and exposure. Arctic explorers have from time to time reported that although they were exposed to intense cold, fatigue, and other unhygienic factors, they were free from colds while in extreme northern latitudes. Soon after their return to civilization, however, infections appeared and they were apparently as susceptible to colds as others.

Chocolate Banana Cake Praised As Ideal Sunday Evening Pickup

The latest version of America's favorite cake—chocolate layers combined shortcake fashion with bananas and whipped cream, will make an admirable Sunday evening pickup meal if accompanied by a cup of hot, fragrant coffee.

Recipe for Latest Version of Old Favorite Is Offered.

By Dorothea Duncan.

NOW WE HAVE the latest version of that American favorite—the chocolate cake. Bananas, whipped cream and chocolate layers are combined to form a cake that is perfect for the 7 o'clock Sunday evening pick-up if supper has been eliminated. Served with hot, fragrant coffee, this chocolate banana cake will delight your family and intrigue your friends.

Bake your favorite chocolate cake in two layers. When the cake has cooled, place one layer on a serving plate and cover it with banana rings. Place the second layer on top of the first as for shortcake. Top the cake with sweetened whipped cream and garnish with strips of the fruit, placed spoke fashion. Use a border of the fruit cut in circles around the edge of the cake as well as around the top.

The following recipe for chocolate cake will make two 10-inch layers:

Chocolate Cake.

2 cups sifted cake flour
½ cup butter or other shortening
2 eggs, unbeaten
1 cup sweet milk
1 teaspoon soda
1¼ cups brown sugar, firmly packed
3 squares unsweetened chocolate, melted
1 teaspoon vanilla

Sift flour once, measure, add soda, and sift together three times. Cream butter thoroughly, add sugar gradually, and cream together until light and fluffy. Add eggs, one at a time, beating well after each addition. Add chocolate and beat well. Add flour, alternately with milk, a small amount at a time. Beat after each addition until smooth. Add vanilla. Bake in two greased and floured 10-inch layer pans in a moderate oven (325 degrees F.) 30 minutes.

Fricassee of Chicken.

1 fowl
2 or 3 slices salt pork
2 tablespoons flour
Salt and pepper
1 teaspoon onion juice, if desired
1 pint boiling water

Singe, clean and cut up chicken. Place salt pork in a frying pan, and when hot put in chicken, leaving plenty of room to turn the meat; cook until each piece is a rich brown. Remove the chicken and keep it warm. Add the flour to the fat in the pan, stir well, and when it has cooked two minutes, add the boiling water. When the gravy is smooth and boiling, replace the chicken and season with salt and pepper, cover the pan and simmer gently until the chicken is tender, then add a teaspoon of onion juice, if desired, and serve at once. The gravy will be thick enough, and, if the pan has a tight cover, it will not be diminished, even after long cooking.

Other Suggestions Made for Menus Over Week-End.

Raspberry Argentine.

1 package raspberry-flavored gelatin
1 cup cold water
2 slices pineapple, cut in cubes
1 cup boiling water
½ cup stewed prunes, cut in quarters
¼ cup shredded, blanched almonds

Dissolve gelatin in boiling water, add cold water. Put half the mixture in a mold to half fill; chill until firm. Chill remaining gelatin and when it begins to thicken, add fruit and almonds. Pour on top of firm gelatin in mold. Chill until firm. Serves six.

Chemise That Won't Mar Gown Offered in Today's Pattern

Pattern No. 849.

IT doesn't matter how perfectly a frock may be fitted if the lingerie beneath is guilty of wrinkling and "bunching." Here is a chemise that will not mar the smoothness of the most closely molded gown. Cut on the bias, with a fitted brassiere top, it conforms perfectly to the lines of the figure.

The yardage required is so small that it is possible to own an exquisite bit of fine hand-made lingerie for "next to nothing." Size 18 (36) needs only 1⅝ yards of 39-inch fabric. The sizes are 14 to 42.

Hearts Opened To the Needy At Wellesley

THE WELL-KNOWN depression has had at least one good effect. It has made Wellesley College students more thoughtful and generous, according to a recent article in the Wellesley Magazine.

Basis for the assertion is the large increase in the number of girls who want to do volunteer welfare work, to assist clinics, to read to the blind, and to go into social service.

"I find that on the whole," says the writer of the article, "students are far more alive to the needs of the world today than were my fellow-students in 1929. As social and economic problems have come to the fore in the last five years the student interest in solving them has certainly increased."

The same writer goes on to say that relatively fewer girls now attend morning chapel, vespers and Sunday services.

AIR STEWARDESS

By VIDA HURST

Irene Gardner, happily secure in her engagement to Dr. Bartlett Ralston, is stunned when he tells her they can't be married. Intent on a brilliant medical career, he points out that he wants to work with Dr. Stephen Reagan, and that marriage to the surgeon's daughter, Peggy, would enhance his opportunities.

To forget Bart, Irene deserts nursing and becomes an air stewardess. She moves into an apartment with Virginia Cathcart, another stewardess, and Eve Meadows, who is in love with Virginia's fiance, Bill Naughton. Virginia suspects that Eve's intentions are not strictly honorable, but is confident of Bill's fidelity.

Irene meets Stephen Reagan, jr., on the plane, and encourages his friendly overtures. Steve introduces her to Peggy, and Irene again sees Bart, curious to analyze his feeling for the pampered, affected girl he intends to marry. At Steve's request, Irene cultivates Peggy's friendship.

A new pilot, Barney O'Sullivan, teasingly calls Irene "Hard-Hearted Hannah." After playing a set of tennis with him in the hangar, Irene is amazed when Barney suddenly kisses her.

IRENE thought that kiss would never end. It shook her like an electric current. It left her feeling like the passenger Barney had knocked unconscious with a blow on the chin. Reeling and dizzy, she was compelled to catch at his arm to keep from falling. For one fleeting instant she had been swept off her feet, not only physically, but emotionally. She had never been kissed like that before.

Then as her blurred gaze slowly cleared she saw that the pilot was laughing at her.

"There's nothing hard-hearted about you," he declared triumphantly.

Irene tried to be angry and failed. Not even to save her pride could she assume the injured dignity the occasion demanded.

"You're terrible," she said, but her voice sounded unconvincing.

"And you're sweet."

Manner Was Casual.

He put one arm in comradely fashion about her waist and kissed her again lightly upon the cheek.

"So now that that's settled we shall proceed back to the station."

His manner was as casual as if nothing had happened, so that it would have seemed silly to have made an issue of it. But what if he told the rest of the pilots that he had won where Tom Merrit had failed?

This idea made her say, resentfully, "I suppose your friends are all betting on the outcome."

"If they are it won't do them any good," he asserted, cheerfully. "I'm not the kind to kiss and tell if that's what you mean. My investigation was purely for my own satisfaction. To prove to myself . . ."

"You needn't go on," she interrupted. "I can understand your reasons perfectly."

He looked at her then, and whistled.

"Gosh, but you're independent. But that's O. K. with me, too. You never saw an Irishman yet who objected to a girl's having spirit."

By this time they had reached the station where Irene hurried inside to change into her own clothes. The pilot made no further effort to talk to her and at 4:30 her plane was speeding north, leaving Barney in Los Angeles.

She told herself he was the coolest, most insolent person she had ever seen, but there had been nothing cool or insolent about his kiss. It had been sweet and tender and so exciting that it made her heart race even to think of it.

Well, then, she wouldn't think of it. Nor of him. From now on it would be a closed incident.

They arrived in San Francisco promptly at 6:30 and a little later Irene was in her ramshackle car hurrying toward her apartment to dress for an engagement with Stephen.

Bart Was Coming.

He had promised to take her to the Palace that evening, but she had no idea that anyone else was going until they were on their way to the city.

"Bart decided he'd like to take a night off, too," Steve said, adding, "He certainly needs it. He looks all in."

There was no reason, of course, why Dr. Bartlett shouldn't take a night off, but after her refusal the day before, Irene suspected him of deliberately planning it.

The other couple was waiting for them at the hotel and Peggy looked prettier than usual in a smart navy blue frock with a hat to match. Irene was wearing the same black taffeta she had worn the night Bart had broken their engagement. It was the first time she had worn it since. Subconsciously she had associated it with her unhappiness, but tonight, for no reason that she could explain, she had felt a desire to wear it.

Bart's Eyes Pleaded.

Smiling politely, she said, "Hello, Peggy dear! Good evening, Bart!" and gave her attention to Stephen.

He was so grateful for it. So considerate and sweet that she wondered why she didn't fall in love with him.

Over Stephen's shoulder Bart's eyes met hers, and before their silent pleading, her own gaze fell. How long would she be able to evade him?

The first time he asked her to dance she said, "I'd rather sit this one out if you don't mind," but she knew it was only delaying it. Bart had deliberately come to the Palace to see her and sooner or later his chance would come. His second invitation she accepted.

"Am I? It's not intentional."

"Irene, you can't treat me like this. I know you love me. We love each other.

"Oh, do we? Well, I used to think so, too, but now I'm not so sure," she retorted.

He held her closer.

"Nothing can alter the fact that we are madly in love. I may not be able to marry you, but that won't keep me from desiring you."

He had always been clever at expressing himself, but tonight his well-chosen phrases were leaving her cold.

"I thought I'd always feel that way about you, too, but I seem to be doing very nicely without you."

"You're saying that to hurt me, Irene. You couldn't have gotten over it so quickly."

"You should have more regard for Peggy than to say such things," she reminded him.

"What I am saying has nothing to do with Peggy. I am very fond of her and after we are married, I shall try to be a devoted husband. But we're not married yet. Why won't you go out with me just one time?"

She Refused Him.

"Because I don't want to, Bart. I don't see how anything can possibly be gained by it."

"Is it because you are afraid?" he demanded. "Afraid you might start caring for me again?"

"Perhaps! I don't know. Why should I be upset all over again just to please you?"

"You have changed, haven't you? You couldn't have said a thing like that two months ago."

"I have had reason to change," she argued.

But as usual in spite of her brave words, her defense against him was weakening. She told herself she positively would not go out with him again under any circumstances but she was afraid if he continued to ask her . . .

Tournament Temperament.

Few players have the temperament for tournament competition. Even the experts have foibles that detract from their play and frequently cost valuable points. Burnstine can not stand slow-playing opponents and Howard Schenken dislikes the kibitzer.

The neophite, naturally, is nervous when pitted against players of experience and his final ranking reflects it. He holds the feeling that every bid, pass or double is being microscopically examined by his opponents. That inferiority complex pops up and his point score drops. Nothing in the world will persuade him that his adversaries' cards are not trained to do tricks as well as take them. Nothing—but long practice.

Experience is the cure for tournament temperament, and even that may fail to cure it fully.

Doubling Gives Extra Trick.

South, Dealer.
East and West vulnerable.

South	West	North	East
Pass	Pass	1♣(1)	1◇
1NT	Pass	Pass(2)	2♡(3)
2♠(4)	Dbl.(5)	Pass	Pass
Pass

1—Since this was in a duplicate match North was reasonably sure that fourth hand would open (this being much more common at duplicate than at rubber bridge), and therefore decided to make a lead-directing bid in the event that East should obtain the final contract.
2—Not wishing to monkey with a buzz-saw.
3—Determined to show both suits.
4—Still not quite sure that North has made a semi-psychic bid.
5—With two vulnerable bids from his partner West recognizes the situation and believes that he has the opponents on the run.

The Play.

West opened the Jack of hearts hoping, since that was his partner's shorter suit, to obtain a ruff and so shorten his trump length in order not to be forced to lead away from his trumps toward the end of the hand. East won with the Ace and returned a low heart which declarer won with the King. A low trump was led, West ducking, dummy's nine-spot holding the trick. The Jack of diamonds was taken by the Ace and a low diamond returned, South winning with the King. A club was followed and the nine finessed, after which the ten of hearts was led, South discarding a diamond and West ruffing. Poor West was now up against it. To clear trumps would permit declarer to set up the dummy. To lead clubs was just as bad, but offered the hope that declarer would make a mistake. Another finesse was taken, the Ace of clubs laid down, and a small club ruffed by declarer, whereupon a low diamond was led. Should West ruff with the Ace, dummy would discard and the trump return would be taken by declarer and his last diamond ruffed out. Should West ruff low, dummy would overruff, after which West could not win anything but the Ace of spades. The double had given declarer a perfect count on the hand and had permitted him to make not only his contract but also an overtrick.

FDIC Suspends Interest Edict

Action Follows Attack by Senator Glass as Contrary to Law.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation yesterday suspended indefinitely application of its recent order reducing from 3 to 2½ per cent the maximum interest which may be charged on time and savings deposits of insured banks which are not members of the Federal Reserve System.

The original order, issued several months ago, the Associated Press says, would have become effective today. When Senator Glass (Democrat), Virginia, charged the action was contrary to law, the order was suspended temporarily in the hope of securing adequate legislation before February 1.

The corporation's action was taken to conform with a similar order issued by the Federal Reserve Board with respect to member banks.

Pair Marooned 10 Days on Isle In Bay Dropped Food by Plane

Ice-Bound in Chesapeake in Sub-Zero Weather, U. S. Employe and Companion Hunting Poachers Left Supplies as Cutter Speeds to Rescue.

Two men marooned for 10 days in sub-zero temperatures on an island near the mouth of the Potomac were supplied with food yesterday by a Coast Guard airplane, which dropped them supplies.

One of the men is an employe of the Biological Survey who went to the island to investigate reports of poaching. Lieut. Comdr. Carl C. von Paulsen, pilot of the plane, said he saw the men on the ground and they picked up the food and responded to his greeting.

Meanwhile, the Coast Guard cutter Apache, which has been relieving distress up and down the bay during the cold spell, was bucking heavy ice in an attempt to reach the island take the men off.

Cornelius Wallace, 29, left his home at Fishing Creek, Md., ten days ago to go to the island. His companion on the trip is still unidentified. The men had provisions for three days. Wallace, who is a deputy game management agent, was to investigate reports that poachers were disturbing the migratory game birds on Holland Island, 12 miles from Crisfield, in Chesapeake Bay.

The men reached the island in a rowboat with an outboard motor. After ice formed around the island, the boat was too light to break its way through and the men could not leave. As they had some food, no alarm was felt at first. Later, when Wallace did not report to his headquarters at Cambridge, Md., officials notified Washington.

Commander von Paulsen was at the Naval Air Station for radio tests to his small plane. He was notified of Wallace's plight, loaded the plane with food, and took off with a mechanic and radio operator.

When he arrived over the island, Commander von Paulsen said, he saw the two men run out of a small frame house. They picked up the sack he tossed overboard, which contained enough food for five days more, and waved their thanks to him.

The house, the only one on the island, is said to be a hunter's shack, without doors or windows. There is sufficient firewood on the island to keep the men warm until the Apache can arrive, however.

The food supplies included 3 cans of beans, 3 cans of applesauce, a pound each of bacon, cheese, butter and coffee, 6 loaves of bread, matches and a can opener.

Senate Acts To Aid Town In Maryland

Boonesboro Bill Allowing Officials to Borrow $2,500 Approved.

Annapolis Legislature Is Ready for Action on State's Finances.

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 31 (Spl.).—The Senate today relieved the financial troubles of Bonesboro, Washington County, and promised to do something definite tomorrow to relieve similar troubles of the State government.

The Boonesboro bill will allow the mayor and town council to borrow $2,500 at once to carry the town through until new taxes can be levied. It was passed by the Senate unanimously. The measure was one of the first introduced by Senator Ernest W. Miller (Republican), Washington. It now goes to the House for action.

Some definite action will be taken before the Legislature adjourns tomorrow on the proposed ways of raising the money the State needs by Monday, Senator J. Allan Coad, chairman of the finance committee, promised. The funds needed include $2,300,000 to meet a deficit and $1,500,000 for working capital.

Two Proposals.

There are two proposals, one providing for the sale of the State's annuity in the Northern Central Railway, valued at $2,500,000, and one for a tax of $1 per barrel on beer. The latter bill is now before the Senate, having been introduced several days ago by Senator Milton L. Veasey (Democrat), Worcester County.

Delegates Theodore Berman (Republican), Baltimore City, sponsored three antilynching bills patterned generally along the lines of legislation sought two years ago following the lynching at Princess Anne. Outstanding features of the measures are: Requiring county sheriffs to move a prisoner suspected of capital offense to a distant jail for safekeeping; making sheriffs liable for damage for failure to exercise proper care of prisoners in their custody and, if found guilty of negligence, providing that they be subject to removal by the Governor.

Provision to expedite trials also is included in the proposals. The four women delegates in the House joined in presenting the women jury service bill. They are Mrs. Lulu W. Boucher (Republican) Allegany; Mrs. Mayne A. Collins (Democrat), Somerset; Miss Ruth E. Shoemaker (Democrat), Montgomery, and Mrs. E. Blanche Phillips (Democrat), Baltimore City.

Other Acts Proposed.

Other introductions included: House — By Hayes, Montgomery County, joint resolution petitioning Congress to adopt the Frazier-Lemke farm refinancing bill, providing for liquidation and refinancing agricultural indebtedness at reduced interest through the FCA and the Federal Land Bank; Chambers and Geraghty, Baltimore City, constitutional amendment making two terms the maximum tenure of office for Governor; Hoffman, Somerset, reducing the license fee for oyster dredge boats from $3.50 to $2 for each gross ton and making a flat fee of $11.50 for boats of less than 4 tons; Bruno, Baltimore City, reducing chauffeurs' license fee from $3 to $1.

Gov. Nice approved the first bill to clear legislative channels. It empowers the Harford County commissioners to contribute to libraries and fire departments.

Corn-Hog Contracts Prepared by County

Warrenton, Va., Jan. 31 (Spl.).—Joseph Copley, agricultural agent of Fauquier County, today mailed to farmers a schedule of dates and places where they may sign applications for the 1935 corn-hog contracts. Following the signing of applications, an election will be held for district committeemen, who will appraise the corn yield for the farms of the signers of applications. The signers of the applications are eligible to vote for the committeemen, although signing of applications does not mean the farmer is obliged to sign a contract.

Truck in Flames Drives Right to Firehouse.

Crisfield, Md., Jan. 31 (Spl.).—Educational work in Fire Prevention Week seems to have brought results. They're bringing the fires to the firemen now.

A Virginia truckman was stopped near Salisbury recently by a motorist who saw that his truck was afire.

"Do you want me to call the fire department?" the motorist asked.

"No thanks, I'm going right by the firehouse. I'll stop in on the way," was the answer.

The truck rolled through Salisbury, smoke and flames billowing forth from the rear. In the cab was the driver, nonchalantly driving to the strains of a dance orchestra over his radio.

A line of hose was run out to the truck and a pumper started. The fire was extinguished without a fire engine being moved. The truckman thanked them and drove off, his radio still blaring.

Gangster Girl To Be Returned For U. S. Trial

Six Officials Will Take Marie McKeever to Baltimore.

Baltimore, Md., Jan. 31 (Spl.).—Two United States attorneys, three detectives and a Maryland National Guard officer will go to Philadelphia tomorrow to return Marie McKeever to Baltimore for trial. She was arrested in New York recently when Robert Mais and Walter Legenza, leaders of the Tristate gang, were taken into custody by Federal agents, and she was indicted here today by the Federal grand jury on a charge of concealing and possessing automatic rifles and pistols stolen from the Government.

The indictment charges her with assisting Mais and Legenza in the concealment of two automatic rifles and four automatic pistols which were stolen in June "from the Maryland National Guard Armory at Hyattsville."

United States Attorney Bernard J. Flynn will be accompanied to Philadelphia by his assistant, T. Barton Harrington; Detective Lieut. James A. Manning, Detective Sergt. William Feehley, Detective George Mintiens and Capt. John Brooks, of the First Regiment, Maryland National Guard.

Mais and Legenza are under sentence to die Saturday morning in the electric chair at Richmond, Va. The maximum penalty the McKeever woman could receive under the statute she is accused of violating would be a $5,000 fine and five years in prison.

Months Required To Repair Phones

Snow Damage Found Large in Eastern Maryland.

Salisbury, Md., Jan. 31 (Spl.).—Permanent rehabilitation of the telephone system on the Eastern Shore of Maryland, disrupted by last week's sleet and snow storm, will require several months, officials of the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Co. said today.

The company has not yet made an estimate of the financial loss. From Tuesday night until Sunday the entire area was without toll lines. Bending first efforts to these, workmen have effected partial emergency service. Hundreds of rural subscribers are still without service.

Earl Johnson, commercial superintendent, said 2,700 subscriber stations were rendered useless by the storm. Only 275 of these were in the vicinity of Salisbury, for the snowfall was heavier and the damage greater in the upper regions of the shore.

Leonardtown, Md., Jan. 31 (Spl.).—Residents of Buzzards Point, which lies directly across from Leonardtown, on the opposite shore of wide and deep Breton's Bay, are taking advantage of the freeze and walking over the ice to Leonardtown. Otherwise they would have to drive around the peninsula on which they live by land over slippery roads for nine miles.

Coasting Toll Reaches Three at Waynesboro

Waynesboro, Pa., Jan. 31 (Spl.).—Donald Harbaugh, 13, Rouzerville, was killed last night in the third sledding fatality of the season here. Riding on the back of Lawrence Martin, Rouzerville, he was hurled from the sled and his head struck a rock. He died of a fractured skull in the Waynesboro Hospital.

The accident occurred when Martin tried to avoid hitting two women coasters walking up the road. Unable to turn away, Martin crashed into the women's sledge. He was uninjured. No inquest will be held Coroner A. W. Thrush decided.

Court Grants Right to Sue E. L. Coblentz

O'Conor Ruling Paves Way for Settlement of 200 Estates.

Frederick, Md., Jan. 31 (AP).—Authority to enter suit for more than $1,000,000 against Emory L. Coblentz, former president of the defunct Central Trust Co. of Maryland, was granted in Circuit Court here today to William B. French, trustee of the Blue Ridge Securities Corporation.

The order granting authorization for the suit was signed by Chief Judge Hammond Urner and Associate Judge Arthur D. Willard.

French also was authorized by the court to enter claim with the receiver of Hambleton & Co., former Baltimore banking concern, for $371,605, representing coupon interest allegedly due under an agreement of the corporation with the Baltimore concern.

The suit against Coblentz involves an alleged guarantee to pay the maturing principal and interest on a series of 6 per cent notes totaling a par value of $900,000, issued April 15, 1930, by the Blue Ridge Securities Corporation. The notes were payable serially.

The suit sets forth that $23,000 in face value of notes was retired as of August 14, 1931, nad that there is now outstanding $877,000. There is due as of January 15, 1935, the suit continues, interest in the amount of $210,480 on notes and $677,500 in principal, while $199,500 of the principal will fall due April 15.

By reason of the default of payment of interest and principal on matured notes, the suit alleges all notes, whether or not due and payable, became due and payable according to indenture.

In view of the guarantee of Coblentz on indenture, the suit was brought against him to collect the principal and accrued interest on notes, amounting to $1,037,480, as of April 15, 1935. Five series of notes, their face value, interest and total due are listed in the suit.

Ruling Given on Bank Funds.

Frederick, Md., Jan. 31 (Spl.).—An opinion received yesterday from Herbert R. O'Conor, attorney general of Maryland, will permit John Hershberger, register of wills, to proceed with the settlement of more than 200 estates held up because of questions involving funds in closed or restricted banks. The main question was whether certificates of beneficial interest in the People's Liquidation Corporation, which is liquidating the assets of the defunct Central Trust Co., could be appraised, sold and distributed at face value and if so should State taxes be collected on the original amount or on the appraised sale value.

Information also was desired as to whether an executor or administrator holding certificates of beneficial interest in closed banks could have them distributed to the heirs at their appraised value or if the certificates could be sold under an order of the court to provide funds for the payment of State taxes.

The attorney general held that under a decision of the Court of Appeals, executors or administrators of estates are personally responsible in the event of default of depositories unless the deposit was made pursuant to an order of the orphans' court. It also was pointed out that in an opinion of former Attorney General Lane it is the duty of the orphans' court to designate a depository when required and that State taxes should be collected upon the full amount of the deposit.

Attorney General O'Conor held further that the executor or administrator of an estate can not be held responsible except for assets that come into his hands. If the loss occurred before the death of the decedent it seems clear that certificates of beneficial interest constitute assets of the estate and should be appraised as any other assets, he said.

'Mystery Rock' Balks Exploration of Tunnel

Westminster, Md., Jan. 31 (Spl.).—Closely guarding its secret, the "mystery rock" which stands at the top of "Rattlesnake Hill," near Union Mills, Carroll County, has defied recent efforts at exploration of a tunnel, the entrance to which is located at the base of the rock.

A mystery to residents of upper Carroll County for many years, the entrance in the rock formerly was barred by a crude wooden door, and even the oldest residents of Union Mills are unable to recall any facts concerning its origin.

According to the older citizens of Union Mills, the rock used to be a favorite picnic ground, and a few of the more venturesome boys in the neighborhood would explore the entrance for several yards, where the tunnel in the rock makes a sharp turn to the right. It is not known whether any one explored the tunnel beyond the first turn, although several "old-timers" stated that they had stood at the turn and that rocks thrown several feet in front of them never were heard to strike the ground.

Interest in the rock was revived recently when it was reported that a dog had chased a rabbit into the tunnel, and that neither the rabbit nor the dog had reappeared.

Headed by Arthur C. Bowers, of Westminster, a former resident of Union Mills, a small party of explorers attempted to solve the riddle, only to find that beyond the first turn, passage was blocked by fallen rocks and dirt. According to Mr. Bowers, who uncovered a portion of the old door to the tunnel, the entrance is considerably smaller than it was 30 years ago, probably due to the shifting of the huge rock.

Avoided by the superstitious, the rock keeps its secret, which may never be solved unless an effort is made to clear the passageway. That, it is believed, may be closed completely in the course of several years by shifting of the formation.

A GAVEL made from the wood of a weeping willow tree with ancestry the donor traces back to the Jewish exodus from Babylon in 700 B. C. will become the symbol of authority in the West Virginia Legislature this session.

E. D. Smoot, who presented the gavel to John J. Pelter, speaker of the House of Delegates, claims that the willow from which the mallet was carved is a descendant of a tree the Jews transplanted from Babylon to Jerusalem more than 2,000 years later. Napoleon took a slip from this and transferred it to the Royal Tombs of France. A slip from this tree was planted at St. Helena, where American sailors, admiring it, took similar steps to start a slip at the grave of George Washington at Mount Vernon. In 1893 Smoot and the late Representative Harry Woodyard, of Spencer, W. Va., transplanted a slip from the Mount Vernon willow at Spencer.

Walter P. Chrysler, automobile manufacturer, who does most of his hunting from a palatial hunting retreat over on the Eastern Shore of Maryland, believes in facilities. His duck blinds on LeCompte's Bay are equipped with stoves and radios.

A newcomer to hunting and fishing activities of Eastern Shore is George H. Earle, Pennsylvania's new Governor. He has purchased Guinea, a 1,338-acre marshland hunting preserve on Fishing Bay.

West Virginia barbers are now getting instructions from the State government on how to brush their patrons' hair. A change in the State code has stipulated that the old-fashioned brush must go into discard and that they must use the more sanitary "open back" model in the future.

Waynesboro Rites Today For Banker

Morris T. Brown Was Leader in Franklin Fiscal Circles.

Services Conducted for James P. Napier at Buckhannon.

Waynesboro, Pa., Jan. 31 (Spl.).—Funeral services will be held at 4 p. m. tomorrow at the residence for Morris T. Brown, 64, executive vice president and cashier of the First National Bank and Trust Co. in Waynesboro, who died yesterday morning of uremic poisoning and heart trouble.

A native of Cavetown, Md., Mr. Brown came to Waynesboro in 1892 following graduation from Hagerstown (Md.) High School and Gettysburg College. He entered the mercantile business with his brother, C. E. H. Brown, and in 1900 formed a partnership in the grocery business. He sold his interests in 1916 to become cashier of the Bank of Waynesboro, holding that position until 1924, when he was elected vice president and cashier of the First National Bank, one of the largest and most successful banking institutions in the Cumberland Valley. He also served as president of the Waynesboro Trust Co. from 1924 until 1927, when it was merged with the First National.

He was president of the Franklin County Bankers Association, director and treasurer of the Waynesboro Hospital since its inception in 1922. He was a member of the Lutheran Church, also of the Kittochtinny Historical Society. Fraternally he was affiliated with Friendship Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Hagerstown; Ethel Chapter No. 27, and St. Bernard Commandery, No. 9, Hagerstown; Knights Templar, Boumi Temple of the Shrine, Baltimore; Shrine Club and Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Waynesboro.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Maud Miller Brown, whom he married in Winchester, Va., in 1922; three stepchildren and these brothers and sisters: Mrs. M. D. Hoover, St. Augustine, Fla.; Misses Annie and Villa Brown, Baltimore; Mrs. Emma Delauter, Mrs. Urie Carter, Hagerstown; J. A. Brown, Caveton, and Charles E. H. Brown, Waynesboro; also by a sister-in-law, Mrs. Mollie Brown, Washington.

James P. Napier Buried.

Buckhannon, W. Va., Jan. 31 (Spl.).—Funeral services were held this afternoon at Bailey Church for James P. Napier, 93, who served in Company E, Tenth Virginia Volunteers, in the Civil War. Frank B. Bartlett Post, No. 7, American Legion, provided a military escort. Mr. Napier was a native of Albermarle County, Va., a son of Richard A. and Nancy Ellison Napier. After serving in the war with distinction, he was discharged at Richmond, August 10, 1863. He was twice wounded, once in the leg and also in the head. He never married. He leaves a brother, R. A. Napier, and a sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Wilfong.

M. J. O'Neal Services.

Fairmont, W. Va., Jan. 31 (Spl.).—Funeral services were held this morning at St. Peter's Catholic Church for Michael Joseph O'Neal, 83, and the body was taken to Baltimore for interment in Cathedral Cemetery tomorrow. Mr. O'Neal was a native of Cumberland, Md. He was a stockholder and executive in Hartley's department store. His widow survives. They were married 53 years ago.

Mrs. Belle Early Dies.

Charlottesville, Va., Jan. 31 (Spl.).—Mrs. Belle Early, wife of J. W. Early, young business man of Orange, died yesterday at University Hospital, where she had been under treatment for the past five weeks, following an operation.

The body was taken to Orange, where the funeral and interment will be held tomorrow afternoon.

Mrs. Early was Miss Belle Gibbs, daughter of the late P. M. Gibbs, of Orange, and was 34 years of age. Besides her husband, she is survived by her mother, and a brother, Robert Gibbs, both residents of Orange.

Virginia to Fix Last Bad Area Of Valley Pike

To Widen and Modernize Section Through Town of Mt. Crawford.

Harrisonburg, Va., Jan. 31 (Spl.).—The famous Valley pike, officially known as U. S. Route No. 11, will be widened and modernized through the town of Mount Crawford, in southern Rockingham County, the last unimproved section of the highway, it is announced by Highway Department Engineer P. O. Bailey.

For years the State highway department and the town of Mount Crawford have been trying to reach an agreement by which the present route through the town may be widened. These negotiations have been fruitless. Finally, the State highway department announced it intended to build around the town. This brought a renewal of negotiations, which resulted in an agreement.

In order to reconstruct the highway through the town, it will be necessary to move back many houses and stores. The sharp curve south of the town, upon which have occurred a number of fatal accidents, will be eliminated. When completed, the pike will be modernized between Winchester and Staunton, a distance of 100 miles.

Work upon the Mount Crawford link will start about March 15, Echols Bros., of Staunton, have the contract. A new wide concrete bridge also will replace the present narrow one over Noth River, south of Mount Crawford.

Postmaster Sets Service Record

Waynesboro Official Leaves With 20-Year Mark.

Waynesboro, Va., Jan. 31 (Spl.).—J. Harvey Furr closed 20 years and 3 months of service as Waynesboro's postmaster today, the longest period of office of any postmaster between Washington and Cincinnati, according to officials. Mr. Furr was first appointed by President Theodore Roosevelt in 1906. He left the service in 1914, only to return in 1922 to serve continuously until today.

He is succeeded by J. Frank Harper, for the past 24 years chairman of the Augusta County board of supervisors and prominent business leader here. Mr. Harper was also chairman of the district home board and originated the plan of consolidating county poorhouses.

Stable Blaze Causes Loss Of $75,000

Cold Handicaps Firemen Fighting Flames Near Baltimore.

Baltimore, Jan. 31 (AP).—The large coach house and stable on the Brooklandwood estate of Mrs. Isaac E. Emerson was destroyed by fire today at an estimated loss of $75,000.

Joshua Fowble, an employe on the estate, was found by Herbert Ricketts, the chauffeur, overcome by smoke and was led to safety. Four persons were forced to flee from the residential part of the building.

Fire companies from Towson, Cockeysville, Lutherville, Owings Mills and Pikesville were hampered in fighting the flames by the cold which, quickly froze the water thrown on the fire, and by the distance the water had to be pumped. Fireman H. M. Bryant was numbed by the cold and fell from a ladder.

The blaze was discovered by the wife of the chauffeur. Firemen said it started in a defective furnace in the Ricketts' cellar. Four horses and several old sleighs, coaches and landaus were saved from the building.

Mrs. Emerson watched the fire from near her mansion, 400 feet away. She was accompanied by a woman companion and a detective, her guard since a recent kidnaping threat.

Projects Asked For Six Cities

Works List Submitted to State; V. P. I. Seeks Erosion Unit.

Richmond, Jan. 31 (AP).—Six Virginia cities and towns and the department of agricultural engineering at V. P. I. today submitted to the State PWA projects for construction under the President's new expanded public works administration work relief program.

Projects submitted by the cities and towns would involve construction costs aggregating $642,320, and the V. P. I. project would cost approximately $252,000.

The cities and towns and the amount of construction they proposed follow: Staunton, $152,600; Hampton, $241,200; Colonial Beach, $56,500; Woodstock, $12,000; Rocky Mount, $80,000 and Narrows, $100,000.

V. P. I. proposed a soil erosion project which would set up 60 terracing units in 30 Virginia counties.

Fire Destroys Home; Damage Put at $8,000

Crisfield, Md., Jan. 31 (Spl.).—Fire of undetermined origin destroyed the large dwelling of William Sterling, on State road here today. Crisfield Volunteer Firemen rushed to scene, but were handicapped by lack of water. A large part of the household furniture also was destroyed. Damage is estimated at $8,000.

British Producers Announce Pretentious Plans for Continued 1935 "Invasion"

Korda Studio Vies With the World's Finest

Reprinted From Yesterday's Last Edition.

By Nelson B. Bell.

The "British invasion" not only continues unabated, but gathers momentum as time goes on.

During the ensuing year, according to announcement just made, London Films will be represented in America by a greater number of feature releases than at any time in the history of the company.

With "The Scarlet Pimpernel" scheduled for presentation, beginning February 7, at Radio City Music Hall in New York, with Leslie Howard and Merle Oberon in the stellar roles, London Films, under the guidance of Alexander Korda, finds itself definitely and auspiciously launched on its 1935 program.

The huge picture plant now under construction at Elstree, the Hollywood of England, will be one of the largest and most complete in the world. Its capacity will be as great as that of any studio in the American film capital.

An Elaborate Program.

Immediately upon the completion of "The Scarlet Pimpernel," activity was begun on "Congo Raid," the screen version of Edgar Wallace's popular book, "Sanders of the River," already produced on this side, unless I am mistaken, with Carole Lombard, Charles Laughton and Charles Bickford in the principal roles.

In preparation for the London Films' production of this subject, Zoltan Korda, the director, went to Africa months ago to record authentic sequences. These have been made the basis of further plot development in the studio—the trick so often employed in Hollywood. Paul Robeson, Nina Mae MacKinney and Leslie Banks have the leads.

While H. G. Wells' original story for the screen, "One Hundred Years From Now," will not go before the camera for several weeks, preparatory work has been going on for nearly a year. It is expected that this production will be ready for release early in the spring.

Color Also Employed.

One of the most important items on the schedule for 1935 is the all-color production based on the adventures of "Lawrence in Arabia," with Leslie Howard in the title role. This would be the offset to "Becky Sharpe," being done wholly in the new Technicolor three-tone process on this side.

"Mary Read," a highly successful London stage play, goes into production late in the spring with Flora Robson, of the original stage cast, continuing in the same assignment before the cameras and microphones.

Charles Laughton, whose first outstanding screen triumph was in London films' production of "The Private Life of Henry VIII"—an outstanding performance which he has since matched in "The Barretts of Wimpole Street" and perhaps one or two other instances—will return to the Korda studio to assume the stellar role in "Sir Tristram Goes West," an original story which appeared in punch, of all places! Korda has secured Rene Clair to direct this film.

Rene Clair is one of the foremost of modern directors, his "Under the Roofs of Paris" having created a sensation, although it was never publicly exhibited in Washington by reason of the fact that it was entirely in French and no English version ever was made.

For U. A. Release.

Other subjects that appear definitely in the 1935 plans of London films are a screen version of the life of Nijinsky, based on the book by his wife, with Charles Laughton slated for the role of Diaghilev; a celluloid adaptation of A. E. W. Mason's famous book, "The Broken Road," with much of the production made in India, and "Young Mr. Disraeli," a picturization of the play of that name, dealing with the early days of the great statesman.

We take the liberty of assuming that Mr. Arliss will not be drafted for the stellar role in the junior version of the subject in which he won the gold medal in this country in the year of its release!

We recite these activities on the part of a flourishing British producing firm partially because they reflect the nature and magnitude of the "threat" which Hollywood may expect, but more particularly because all of these London films productions will be distributed in this country as releases of our own United Artists.

Gelatin bands across the sea, or something!

For those who have been clamoring for the appearance in Washington of the most famous revue of the past year or two, it will be of interest that mail orders are now being received for the engagement of "As Thousands Cheer," which comes to the National for one week only, beginning Sunday night, February 10. Although this celebrated Irving Berlin-Moss Hart musical played at a top price of $5.50 per seat throughout the 40 weeks of its run at the Music Box Theater in New York, Sam H. Harris, the producer, has been adament in his insistence that the top price on the road be kept down to $3.30, to give the greatest number of people possible an opportunity to see this gay satire on current personalities and events. The production can not "pay off" on any lower scale.

A Star's New Technique.

Stars of Tomorrow's Cinemas

Costarred with Cary Grant, the soaring Miss Myrna Loy, pictured charmingly above at left, will come to the screen of Loew's Fox Theater tomorrow in "Wings in the Dark," a down-to-earth action-drama of two flying sweethearts. Above at right is that genial Hutchinson in "The Right to Live," the Earle's screen feature for young Irishman, George Brent, who shares honors with Josephine the new week, also opening tomorrow.

melodramas, being presented this week in the National Theater, is to be found in the matter of timing.

Miss Skinner's personal delivery of her speeches, her "action" and her movements about the stage all are in the accepted tempo of legitimate acting of the highest order, but it will be observed by those who watch for such things that there is no elapsed time in which the suggested characters in the play, other than Miss Skinner, who alone is seen and heard, might execute the "business" implied by Miss Skinner's lines.

For example, in "Mansion on the Hudson," when Mrs. Stanley Howland summons her children from the garden to meet her former suitor, Stanley, jr., Carrie and DeWitt could not possibly have had time to enter the house between the moment of being called and the instant when their mother turns to her girlhood lover and introduces them. This is a procedure that is adhered to throughout the six-act scenes of the unaplay—which is a perfectly good word, I hope, which I invented myself. It is a procedure, furthermore, that would have to be adhered to, unless Miss Skinner's dramatic sequences are to lag interminably.

Method Is Unique.

Nevertheless, it is a method that is peculiar in that by destroying one of the cardinal rules of the speaking stage it makes completely realistic a new form of dramatic expression in which the mind of the spectator conceives action that would require vastly more time than is allowed for it.

"Mansion on the Hudson," if played by a full cast of living characters, would be a complete evening's entertainment, running from 8:30 to 11 or 11:15 o'clock. As Miss Skinner presents it, it is over at 10:30, with three short sketches added as curtain-raisers.

This, of course, is but another facet of the brilliant artistry, keen sense of "theater" and creative genius that have made Cornelia Otis Skinner and her novel form of one-person drama a distinctive and exclusive factor in modern entertainment.

She has perfected a technique, both in writing and acting, that is wholly and completely her own, and it seems to me that "Mansion on the Hudson" is only the beginning of the realization of the richness of its potentialities.

Miss Mabel Van Dyke, of the Pierce Hall Players, has sent out a call for those who wish to try out for parts in "The Field of Honor," a new manuscript play never presented on any stage, which will be acted in Pierce Hall as a Broadway test on Wednesday and Thursday, February 6 and 7, at 8 p. m. The new play was written by Betty Souby and the dramatis personae include ten men of varying ages, one woman, one young girl and a younger boy and girl. Miss Van Dyke told this column weeks ago—it may have been months—that she would concentrate on the production of new plays only. This one was brought to her attention by Mrs. J. W. Peters and will be viewed by the author when done for the first time at Fifteenth and Harvard streets.

Will Not Paint Lily!

It is comforting to know that no attempt will be made to improve on Shakespeare and that there will be no "Additional dialogue by So-and-So," when "A Midsummer Night's Dream" finally reaches its way to the silver sheet under the ambitious auspices of the Warner Brothers.

Not a line, not a word, will be spoken by any character in "A Midsummer Night's Dream," now being filmed by Max Reinhardt, except the speeches written by William Shakespeare. One pantomimic character, it seems, is being introduced—a wife for Bottom the Weaver (played by Jimmy Cagney). Mrs. Bottom's lips will be sealed.

Adapters Pleased.

Two professional scenarists, Charles Kenyon and Mary McCall, jr., were assigned by the studios to adapt the fairy fantasy for filming. The ironclad orders they received, that not a syllable of their own composition was to be incorporated in the "shooting" script, were welcomed by the adapters, who are as modest as they are competent. Their work therefore consisted in rearranging certain scenes, cutting a little here and there, but adding nothing—except the aforesaid speechless Mrs. Bottom.

The experiment of bringing the "Dream" to the talking screen has already attracted wide interest, and at present the sound stages on which it is being made are probably the most talked-about "sets" in Hollywood. One of the stages was 300 feet long before Prof. Reinhardt's cohorts went to work; it has been enlarged to 450 feet in order that the Herr Professor may have all the room he needs for his embodiment of the poet's fancies.

Manager Charles Brennan of the Metropolitan Theater reports that if the daily average of the week in the matter of enrollments in his newly formed Clue Club is maintained, today will witness the signing up of the 1,000th member. The Clue Club is an organization of film fans whose natural predilections are in the direction of mystery plays and detective stories involving something of an analytical and a deductive sense for their solution. Mr. Brennan has quite a number of these films coming along in the near future, beginning with "The White Cockatoo" tomorrow, and it begins to look as if he might have a ready-made audience by the time they get here.

Ornithological Note.

Of course, when it comes to "The White Cockatoo," you can't compare with "The Canary Murder Case!"

Unique Star Is Seen in Two of Her Best Works

Cornelia Otis Skinner in "Henry VIII," "Eugenie" at the National.

By Nelson B. Bell.

For her matinee and night bills yesterday, Cornelia Otis Skinner, one of the unique artistes of the American theater, presented two of her multiple-scene dramatic sequences which already have proved their worth to Washington audiences.

In the afternoon, the piece de resistance of the program was "The Wives of Henry VIII," that incomparable glimpse into the private life of the Tudor King in which Miss Skinner gives, in turn, illuminating studies of Catherine of Aragon, Anne Boleyn, Jane Seymour, Anne of Cleves, Kathryn Howard and Katherine Parr, spanning the years from 1532 to 1547.

There is amazing versatility displayed in the portrayal of these contrasting queens who in succession engaged the attention of bluff King Hal. Miss Skinner brings to their depiction delicate nuances, shimmering highlights and fleeting shadows that lend this revivification of figures of a distant past a realism and a living power that project themselves across the footlights with impressive forcefulness.

To many, Anne Boleyn, "The Flanders Mare" (Anne of Cleves) and Katherine Parr remain the most effective figures of this colorful, but tragic, group, although any selection of a favorite must continue to be a matter of personal choice, for in the skill betrayed in the creation of each of these cameo likenesses it would be difficult to detect a flaw.

A Tragic Biography.

"The Empress Eugenie" was the bill last night. In this six-scene biographical revival, Miss Skinner traces the lifetime of one of the world's heroic noblewomen, from 1853 to 1919, the year before her return to Spain, where she passed peacefully away on July 11, 1920.

This, essentially, is a study in the tragedy of a lifetime of disappointment and disaster, in which its author-star finds outlet for those emotional gifts with which she is so richly endowed. During the progress of this recital we see Eugenie bereft of country, husband and only child, yet surviving these great sorrows by the sheer determination of a valiant spirit that would not bow to defeat.

Confining her talents to a single character, instead of distributing them over a considerable group, Miss Skinner, as Empress Eugenie, makes plain what superb artiste she would be in conventional drama, were she not so securely ensconced in her own distinguished and particular niche.

Short Sketches Added.

Each dramatic sequence was preceded by a group of Miss Skinner's short character sketches.

With "The Wives of Henry VIII" were presented "The Eve of Departure," "Sunday Driving," an amusing and timely satire; "Being Presented," one of the gems of Miss Skinner's entire repertoire, and "Times Square."

As curtain raisers to "Empress Eugenie," last night's audience witnessed "A Southern Girl in the Sistine Chapel," a classic of superficiality; "Homework," almost on a par with "Being Presented" as a faultless bit of humor; "In a Telephone Booth" and "Motoring in the Nineties."

Tonight and at Saturday's matinee the bill will be "The Loves of Charles II," augmented by a further selection of preliminary short sketches.

Walter Huston Is New Week's Foremost Star

Comes to National in Fine Play as Screens Offer Elaborate Programs.

Reprinted from yesterday's Last Edition.

Walter Huston will be next week's distinguished star at the National Theater. The vehicle for his brilliant talents will be Sidney Howard's exceptionally deft dramatization of Sinclair Lewis' novel of "Dodsworth," acclaimed one of the finest of last year's hits and included practically unanimously in all of the lists of the "ten best plays."

Not only will Mr. Huston be seen in his unique characterization of Samuel Dodsworth, but Fay Bainter also will appear in her original part, that of Dodsworth's selfish and frivolous wife, Fran. The supporting company will be identical with that which appeared throughout the New York run of the play, under Max Gordon's management, will include Nan Sunderland, Frederick Worlock, Kent Smith, Ethel Jackson, Harlan Briggs, Lenore Harris, Helen Zelenskaya, Alfred Kappeler, John Williams, Nick Adams, William E. Morris and Charles Henderson. There will be the usual Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

"The Right to Live," next week's screen attraction at the Earle Theater, will present Josephine Hutchinson and George Brent in its costellar roles, supported by Colin Clive, Peggy Wood, Henrietta Crosman, C. Aubrey Smith and Leo G. Carroll. The story is based on the novel by W. Somerset Maugham, and deals with the domestic affairs of a beautiful young wife and her crippled husband whom she is accused of murdering. The stage portion of the bill will be headlined by Nan Halperin, whose stories in song are treats of the first water. Other acts will be presented by The Manhattan Steppers, headed by Edith White; Russell, Marconi and Jerry in "Little Bits of Big Hits" and Five Deguchis.

* * * *

Myrna Loy and Cary Grant are the costars of "Wings in the Dark," a thrilling action-picture of two flying sweethearts, which comes to Loew's Fox theater tomorrow as chief feature of the screen program.

Hobart Cavanaugh, Roscoe Karns, Dean Jagger and Bert Hanlon, recently in the stage production of "Tobacco Road," lead the support. Radio's newest sensations, Tim and Irene, bring their comedy to the Fox stage for the first time as headliners of the vaudeville bill. Other acts will be offered by Minor and Root in a dance novelty; Gale and Carson, comics, and the diverting Gautier and his animated toy shop. A special feature will be the Washington premiere of "The March of Time," a new form of news exposition.

What is described as a murder-mystery thriller, guaranteed to send chills up and down the spine, comes to the screen at the Metropolitan tomorrow, when "The White Cockatoo" will be the chief feature of the bill. The play is based on the story by Mignon G. Eberhard and was directed by Alan Crosland. The basis of the yarn is the attempt of two rival gangs to steal the fortune of a beautiful young American. Jean Muir and Ricardo Cortez are cast in the principal roles. Ruth Donnelly, Walter Kingsley and Minna Gombell are prominent in the support.

* * * *

The film version of Brock Pemberton's memorable stage success, "Enter Madame," will be brought to the screen of Loew's Columbia Theater tomorrow with Elissa Landi and Cary Grant in the pivotal roles. The story revolves about the experiences of a temperamental operatic prima donna and her husband. Numerous operatic excerpts are introduced during the action. Lynn Overman, Sharon Lynn, Frank Albertson, Cecelia Parker and Wilfred Hari appear in the supporting cast.

* * * *

The current attraction at RKO-Keith's, "Enchanted April," will continue through the current week, with Ann Harding, Frank Morgan, Reginald Owen and Katherine Alexander in the principal roles. It will be succeeded, perhaps next Tuesday, by "The Mystery of Edwin Drood," a Charles Dickens story, featuring Douglass Montgomery, Heather Angel and Claude Rains.

* * * *

Brighter, breezier and better burlesque is promised at the Gayety next week, beginning with the usual Sunday matinee, when the "Hi-De-Ho" company will take command of the Ninth street stage, with Gene Schuler, "Coo-Coo" Morrissey and Frank Penny leading the invading forces of laughter. Lola Bartram, Sally O'Day, Irene Ross and Lola Pierce head the distaff distractors and disrobers.

* * * *

On Saturday morning of this week at 10:30 o'clock, in the National Theater, the Children's Theater of New York will present Mabel Taliaferro, famous stage star, in "The Prince's Secret," an original play by Clare Tree Major, founder and director of the Children's Theater. The background of the story is a fifteenth century castle in Spain. The major mystery is the disappearance of Prince Ramon from the royal palace. A fine supporting cast is promised.

This Morning...

With Shirley Povich

THERE may be nothing new under the sun, as Aesop, or, mayhap, it was Shakespeare, said, but Miami race goers have been provided with a new outlet for their gambling bent. Hardly had the Hialeah Park officials announced that they were posting $1,500 in prizes to the leading trainers during the 45-day meeting when Mr. Maurice "Dancer" Hyams, king of New York's bookies, set about to make the plan intriguing to all.

Mr. Hyams greeted Hialeah's announcement with a counter announcement to the effect that he is making a future book on the affair. You pays your money and you takes your choice of trainers—at Mr. Hyams' odds.

Bookie-like, Mr. Hyams already has installed as the favorite at 6-to-1 the man who on form appears the winner. The favorite is Hirsch Jacobs, who for two years saddled more winners than any other trainer. Quoted second choice at 7 to 1 are George Alexandra, trainer of the powerful Smallman Stable, and George Phillips, Maemere Stable trainer.

Four trainers are grouped by Mr. Hyams at 8 to 1 odds: James E. Everman, "Sunny Jim" Fitzsimmons, G. W. Ogle and Lon Johnson. Odds range upward to 50 to 1, with a score grouped in the "field" at that price.

Just to place everything above suspicion, this department respectfully recommends that at the finish of the meeting, when the winner is declared, the stewards give him a saliva test.

CLARK C. GRIFFITH, of the Griffith Stadium Griffiths, likes the soubriquet of David Harum conferred upon him by baseball writers who have been kept busy, lo, these many years, recording the multifarious deals of the Nats' owner, but he disclaims all discredit for a pair of deals which in later years he was forced to rectify to the extent of $100,000 from the club treasury.

When he was forced to separate himself from $20,000 and Catcher Luke Sewell for the return of Pitcher Bump Hadley from the St. Louis Browns, Griffith revealed that the idea of trading Hadley to the White Sox at the end of 1930 was not born with him. His manager, Walter Johnson, was the author of that trade.

Johnson had promised Griffith that, given a right-handed hitting outfielder the likes of Carl Reynolds, he would win the 1931 pennant for Washington. Thus it was that Griffith parted not only with Hadley but with Sad Sam Jones and Infielder Jackie Hayes to obtain Reynolds and Johnny Kerr. The latter was tossed into the deal by the White Sox like the thirteenth bun in a baker's dozen.

Back in 1926, after he had won two pennants for the Nats, Bucky Harris noted that Rajah Peckinpaugh was nearing the end of his playing days and insisted that Buddy Myer could not fill the job. Topper Rigney, of the Red Sox, was the man the Nats must have if they were to be a pennant contender, Harris said. Griffith brought Rigney from Boston in exchange for Myer, and two years later was forced to part with Pitchers Milton Gaston and Horace Lisenbee, Infielders Bobby Reeves and Grant Gillis and Outfielder Bigelow to gain Myer's return.

BILL WERBER, Washington's most illustrious baseball product, was telling Bill Coyle on the air last night that he had long ago adopted as his ball-playing ideals Babe Ruth and Ty Cobb, which proves that he was a very discerning young man.

Ruth he liked, Werber said, because no other man in the world could ride the ball as far out of the park as the Bambino, and Cobb he liked because the Georgian was a show in and out of the game, whether he was stealing bases or heckling the umpires or fans. Young Werber couldn't pattern himself after the Babe because of the disparity in their respective physiques, but the 40 bases he stole last year to lead both leagues prove that his study of Cobb was not in vain.

The young third baseman of the Red Sox has some of the cockiness of Cobb about him, too. Bucky Harris will tell you of the letter he, as manager of the Red Sox, received from Werber last spring wherein Werber told Harris that he'd be Boston's regular shortstop before May 1, and for Harris not to include the position among his worries.

Werber didn't make good at shortstop. He was erratic on ground balls and wild on his throws. He was headed for the minors after the first month of the season when Harris conceived the happy idea to transform him into a third baseman, at which position he became the best in the league. And Werber was telling the radio fans last night as how he'd rather play shortstop than third base. Add life's little puzzles.

Bunts.

President Alva Bradley, of the Cleveland Indians, forwarded a blank contract to First Baseman Hal Trosky and told him to fill in his own terms . . . Trosky's $7,500 figure was $500 more than Bradley had planned to pay him, but there was no quibbling . . . Griffith Stadium officials very discreetly omitted the ages of their players on the leaflet containing the 1935 roster . . . but it is known that Earl Whitehill, Heinie Manush and Walter Stewart will be 36 before the season is over . . . Babe Ruth, lingering in Paris on his round-the-world tour, is 15 pounds lighter than during the last playing season . . . Sam Rice, released by Cleveland, wants to become a left-handed golf professional . . . three Nats, all pitchers, bat right or left handed . . . it probably doesn't make any difference . . . Freddie Sington, 6 feet 2 inches, will be the tallest Nat at Biloxi . . . he tops Bobby Burke and Jack Russell by an inch . . . he'll be the heaviest, too . . . his 215 pounds stamp him as the only 200-pounder on the squad . . . when Babe Herman and Rabbit Maranville were roommates with the Brooklyn Club in 1926, the Babe told Maranville: "Why do I have to room with a guy who can't hit his weight?" . . . and the Rabbit came back: "How about me? Rooming with a guy who can't field his weight." . . . it was a foul canard . . . at the time, Herman weighed only 210 . . . he was fielding at least .275 . . . when Bump Hadley received his first big league tryout with the Nats, a rich Massachusetts shoe manufacturer paid his expenses throughout the training period.

Guest Has 66 To Set Pace On Links

Coast Pro 4 Under Par in $6,500 Tourney at Glendale.

Mac Smith Is 2 Shots Back of Leader; Hagen Has 69.

GLENDALE, Calif., Jan. 31 (AP).—A sensational 66, 4 strokes under par, gave Charles Guest, of Los Angeles, the lead in Oakmont's $6,500 open golf tournament after the first round today.

Stepping along in a fashion that belied his 45 years, Macdonald Smith, veteran Carnoustie Scotchman, breezed into second place with a fine 68, while another of the old-timers, Walter Hagen, of Detroit, was third with a 69.

Only Three Crack Par.

There were only three who could crack par in the face of a troublesome wind that crept through the Verdugo hills. Only three had accomplished this feat yesterday. They were, besides Holbrook, Al Zimmerman, of Portland, Oreg., and Les Bolstad, of Minneapolis, who had 69s.

Guest, a Los Angeles driving range professional, cut 2 strokes off par with sensational putts on the sixth and eighth holes, for a 34 going out, and then came home with two more birdies and an eagle, shooting a 32.

Smith, who admitted he was playing his best golf in more than a year, wound up with a bogey on the eighteenth when he missed a 4-foot putt. His sterling irons gave him his low count.

Laffoon Penalized.

Ky Laffoon, of Chicago, might just as well have nished in the 60's had he not played the wrong ball from the middle of the fairway on the eighteenth. Under the new rules this cost him two strokes and he wound up with a par 70 where he was tied for fourth with a host of others, including Clarence Clark, Bloomfield, N. J.; Ray Mangrum, Los Angeles, and Lex Robson, Toronto, Canada.

For the most part the favorites fared much better than those who played in the first half of the field. Olin Dutra, National Open champion, had a 71, along with Willie Goggin, of San Francisco; Vic Owen, of Santa Ana, and Harold Thompson, local amateur.

Jimmy Hines, of Long Island, who gave Bolstad a lesson before he went out yesterday to shoot a 69, had a 72 today, along with Jimmy Edge, of Santa Monica. Leo Diegel, former National P. G. A. champion, who had his tonsils removed only Monday, came in with a 74.

Champion Bows In Florida Golf

Mitchell Beats Goodwin; Durand Advances.

St. Augustine, Fla., Jan. 31 (AP).—The champion fell and the favorite advanced in the quarter-final round of the tournament of golf club champions today.

Tommy Goodwin, Mamaroneck, N. Y., defending his title, went down, 5 and 4, under the steady stroking of C. Bayard Mitchell, St. Petersburg, Fla. Celeste Durand, Garden City, Long Island, tournament favorite, turned back R. H. Landsell, Hackensack, N. J., 4 and 3.

Tomorrow's semifinal matches bring together Durand and Charlie Whitehead, of South River, N. J., and Mitchell and Tommy Whiteway, of Cleveland.

Whitehead defeated Morton McCarthy, Norfolk, Va., 2 and 1, to gain the semifinal bracket, and Whiteway turned aside Bobby Servis, Dayton, Ohio, 3 and 1.

Gonzaga vs. St. John's In Prep League Today

With two of its injured regulars back in the line-up Gonzaga High resumes its drive for the private high school basket ball championship tonight when it faces St. John's on the Gonzaga court, at 8 o'clock.

Gonzaga is leading the league, having a win over Georgetown Prep. St. John's recently fell before Prep, victims of a last-half rally.

The Purple's chances of winning were brightened this week with the return to action of Phil Roache, high-scoring center, and John Lowe, first-string forward. Roache, one of the foremost scholastic centres in the area, has been on the sidelines with a severely lacerated lip.

Garden Will Air Lease Bids Tuesday

Lasky-Braddock Encounter Tonight May Be Last for Corporation.

By Edward J. Neil.

NEW YORK, Jan. 31 (AP).—Art Lasky, Minneapolis heavyweight, risks his pretentions as a championship challenger against belting Jimmy Braddock over the 15-round route tomorrow night.

There's more than a slight possibility that this may be Kid Madison Square Garden's next to the last fight.

Out of the turmoil surrounding the Garden's steady decline through the past two years from the peak position Tex Rickard made for it, the bad decisions of referees and judges, boxing commission uproars, bad feeling between the management and prominent boxers came definite word today that the $5,000,000 corporation is seriously considering a radical change.

To Meet Tuesday.

The Garden board of directors, with Col. John S. Hammond as chairman, will meet next Tuesday to consider the general subject of leasing the arena for boxing. Four potential syndicates are in the field—one headed by Ancil Hoffman, manager of the heavyweight champion, Max Baer, and backed by Chicago financiers; another by James J. Johnston, present Garden matchmaker; a third by Humbert J. Fugazy, Rickard's old rival and the strongest of all politically, and the last by Jack Curley, wrestling promoter, and Mike Jacobs, ticket broker and Rickard's original backer, who recently staged the Barney Ross-Frankie Klick match in Miami, Fla.

Under any circumstances, it is believed that Johnston's regime at the Garden, and probably that of Col. John Reed Kilpatrick will end May 31, the anniversary of Hammond's wresting control of the corporation from Richard F. Hoyt and William A. Carey, successors in control to Rickard.

Allegany High Quintet Wins Fourth Straight

Cumberland, Md., Jan. 31 (Spl.).—Central High School, of Lonaconing, gave Allegany High School a merry chase for 35 minutes at Campobello before falling before Coach Walter Bowers' Blue and White cagers, who registered their fourth straight triump of the Western Maryland Interscholastic League season by the score of 41 to 32.

Don Bowersox, for Allegany, scored eight field goals, mostly on shots outside the foul line, and caged three free throws in as many tries for a total of 19 points.

Door to Big League Swings Open on Sunday for Capital Youth to Be Named by Post

THE door to the big leagues will swing open on Sunday morning for some fortunate sandlotter in Washington or its suburbs when The Washington Post announces its selection of the player chosen to accompany the Nats to their Southern training camp at Biloxi, Miss., for a tryout.

From the ranks of the Washington Post Sandlot Baseball Association, comprising 90 teams in 15 leagues, The Post will select the youth deemed best fitted for a big league baseball career, pay all his hotel and traveling expense during training and offer him the opportunity to earn a contract with the Washington Club.

At Biloxi, the local youth will receive the individual attention of Manager Bucky Harris. He will live with the ball players, follow their training routine; in fact, will indeed be one of them with his baseball future, like theirs, depending on the talent he displays.

From every league, virtually every team, The Post Association, loyal team managers and fans are advancing nominations for the choice, with pitchers in the majority, doubtless due to the recognized fact that the Nats are sorely in need of hurling talent.

The long hop from the sandlots to the big league has been made only rarely, but with the Washington Club extending its "farm" system, a berth in organized baseball is virtually assured the local sandlotter unless he is a keen disappointment at Biloxi.

Through its Chattanooga club of the Southern Association, the Nats are connected with the Selma team of the Southeastern League, while Clark Griffith also has working agreements with Albany of the International League and the clubs in the Middle Atlantic loop.

Despite the numerous graduates of college ranks in big league baseball, the sandlots have been the proving ground for an estimated 80 per cent of major league ball players. Babe Ruth and Ty Cobb, the most illustrious of them all, were sandlotters before they were big leaguers, and the local youth who will go South with the Nats will be breaking no precedent if he makes good.

The list of most-heavily supported candidates follows:

Evers Considers Post As Albany Manager

Albany, N. Y., Jan. 31 (AP).—Johnny Evers may become general manager of the Albany club in the Intrenational League, but first he will have a talk with his good friend, Rabbit Maranville.

It was disclosed tonight that if the Boston Braves let Johnny out as scout all he has to do is sign on the dotted line with Joe Cambria, owner of the Albany Senators, and a new job will be created especially for him.

"The Rabbit wired me that he is coming to town tomorrow night on his way to the news writers' dinner in New York," Johnny said. "I don't know what he wants to see me about, but it's likely I'll talk this thing over with him."

Guarantee Is Posted For Hamas Ring Duel

New York, Jan. 31 (U.P.).—The last obstacle in the way of the Steve Hamas-Max Schemling bout at Hamburg, Germany, March 10 was removed tonight with receipt of a cable announcing that Hamas' $25,000 guarntee had been deposited in the Chase National Bank of Paris.

An indoor stadium is being built to seat 25,000 and the tussle between two of the heavyweight title contenders will be one of the biggest boxing shows ever held in Germany, second only to the Schemling-Walter Neusel match which was staged outdoors and attracted 105,000 spectators.

Campbell Ends Trip To Site of Speed Test

He preceded by days the arrival of his ultra stream-lined "Blue-Bird," the fleet car in which he hopes to better the existing mile record of 272.108 miles an hour.

Russell Quits G. W.; To Join Pro Quintet

Everett Russell, former Tech High School athlete, has abandoned all plans for returning to George Washington University this winter, and will cast his lot with professional basket ball.

Russell had hoped to resume his studies today at college, which would make him eligible for the varsity basket ball team. Roland Logan, coach, already has indicated that he could use a sterling performer such as the former all-city prep ace.

Yesterday Russell definitely decided to turn pro. He will make his debut at forward with the Heurich Brewers against the Boston Trojans of the American League at the Heurich gym Sunday.

G. U. Staves Off Rally to Beat Yale, 32-29

Elis Reduce Hoyas' Huge Lead to Point in Last Minute of Play.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Jan. 31 (Spl.).—Georgetown University staved off a sensational rally late in the second half to emerge with a 32-29 victory over Yale's basket ball team tonight.

The Hoyas' 27-13 advantage, compiled early in the final half, dwindled steadily under a determined scoring spree by the Elis, led by Bud Miles, and Georgetown led only by a point as the teams went into the final minute of play.

With Georgetown in the van, 30 to 29, Coach Fred Mesmer made his lone substitution of the game and the substitute, Eddie Bodine, sank a foul shot. Another successful foul toss by Capt. Ed Hargaden increased the Hoyas' advantage to three points and placed the game beyond recall.

Forewarned of the capabilities of Hargaden, the Elis nevertheless were unable to check the scoring of the brilliant Georgetown captain, who compiled ten points. He was the outstanding individual on the floor despite the 11 points tallied by Budy Miles, Yale guard. Miles' brother, "Eggie," captain of the Yale quintet, contributed nine points to the Elis' total.

Goal in Last Minute Wins for Barton High

Barton, Md., Jan. 31 (Spl.).—Melvin Inskeep's field goal 45 seconds before the final gun gave Barton High School a 33 to 32 victory over LaSalle Institute of Cumberland last night in the first upset of the season in the Western Maryland Interscholastic League. It was Barton's initial league triumph after three losses.

Bill to Raise Daily 'Take' Criticized

Spokesmen for Tracks Insist Aid Is Needed to Retain Sport.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Jan. 31 (AP).—Operators of Maryland race tracks will be ordered to increase their purses this season to meet outside competition, Jervis Spencer, jr., chairman of the State racing commission, said today, in stressing the necessity for the tracks being granted tax relief.

Jervis and Edwin Warfield, jr., member of the commission, appeared before a joint session of the Senate finance and House ways and means committees at a hearing on the administration bill taxing the tracks to raise emergency revenue.

The bill would reduce the daily license fee from $6,000 to $2,000 for each track, eliminate the 15 per cent tax on net receipts and increase the wager or betting turnover tax from 1 to 7½ per cent.

Competition Is Cited.

At present, he said, the tracks take 7 per cent and break on the nickel from money wagered. "If you increase that take, the pool rooms and the book makers can more than compete with the tracks," he said.

"Maryland must have relief, otherwise our racing will drift into mere county fair racing," he stated.

Race track representatives who appeared before the Senate finance group yesterday submitted an alternative proposal. They suggested that the daily license fee be reduced to $500, the net receipt tax be eliminated and the turnover tax be increased to not more than 2½ per cent.

Members of the committee stated during the hearing that the race track spokesmen "said flatly" that they could not operate next year unless given tax relief. Spencer today said they had not applied for dates.

Recommendation Given.

The commission chairman said his first recommendation relative to new track taxation would be no flat daily fee, 2½ per cent turnover tax and the 15 per cent net revenue tax. The net tax brought in $29,032 to the State last year. Jervis estimated that on the basis of last year's bets the increased turnover charge would bring in $625,000.

Told that the tracks had suggested a $500 daily fee, Jervis repeated his recommendation and added that if the tracks felt they could stand the $500 it would "be all right."

The commissioner gave the committees the annual report of the commission setting forth the "deliberate opinion, reluctantly arrived at, that to save racing in the State there must be revision downward of the taxes paid under the present law, so that the tracks will be in a position to increase purses to meet the outside competition."

"Racing has been a great benefit to the State and is worth saving," the report continued. "The tax on wagers must be moderate or it will inevitably defeat its own purpose. Both the attendance and the pari-mutuel play will be adversely affected if too heavy a burden is placed on the pari-mutuel turnover, with a consequent decrease instead of increase in revenue."

Manassas A. C. Victor At Warrenton, 40-14

Manassas, Va., Jan. 31 (Spl.).—The Manassas Athletic Club five again returned home victorious last night, after defeating the Warrenton Athletic Club five with a score of 40-14. This was the third game of the M. A. C. season, and Manassas as yet is undefeated.

John Wurdemann, former player on the Gallaudet team, was high-score man for Manassas with 13 points. Floyd Vetter was the runner-up with 9 points.

Hyattsville Beats Silver Spring Five

Checks Rivals' Late Rally to Triumph, 19-18.

Five shots at the basket in the last 15 seconds from the eager hands of each member of the Silver Spring High School five proved to no avail yesterday as the balls evaded the hoop, and Hyattsville High won its initial Intersuburban League victory, 19 to 18, at Silver Spring.

The game was slow until the last quarter. The visitors, with Quantrille starring, ran the score to 10 to 1 at the first period. They held their own in the next, leading, 13 to 4, at the half, and were in the van, 17 to 8, as the final period started.

Here the Springers found themselves and ran the score to 19 to 16 with four minutes remaining. Hyattsville tightened, but Linkins threw in a one-hand shot with 15 seconds to go, and in the last frenzied seconds each member of the team threw the ball up.

500 of the '400' Open a Pool Room, My Deah! It's Simply Divine How They Know Cues and T's

A Means of Whiling Away Two Afternoon Hours Cause of It All.

By Jack Cuddy.

NEW YORK, Jan. 31 (U.P.).—It may interest the old corner gang to learn that about 500 of New York's so-called "400," the swankiest mugs and dames in town, got together tonight and, between sips of champagne cocktails, opened the first pool room on Park avenue.

My deah—! It was simply devastating the way the ne plus ultra, E. pluribus unum, and what nots took their cue from the plebians and poked those balls around, most of them giving the ivories the English with a broad "a."

Actually, they caromed for more than four hours without ripping a simis cloth or without exchanging fisticuffs or fingernails. "Wait till they start playin' bottle pool, Kelly pool or bagetelle," said a disappointed photographer. "There'll be plenty of fireworks then."

It was an historic occasion, this champagne baptism of the first society poolroom in history. It was covered by sports writers, billiard writers, society writers, regular reporters and columnists. Each was uncertain who should write the story. After a few applications of champagne, everybody started taking notes.

Lillian Uhl and Paradisical Win Split-Feature at Hialeah

Large Crowd Witnesses Program

By Walter Haight
(Post Staff Writer).

HIALEAH PARK, Fla., Jan. 31. Driven off the beaches by a cool breeze from the frozen North, the largest midweek crowd of the meeting saw racing here in the so-called tropics today. The Regret, a 7-furlong sprint for fillies, drew 13 horses and was split in two divisions. The first section was led to the wire by the favored Lillian Uhl, which scored earlier in the week. Those choice followers who tried to parlay the favorites missed on the second half of their bet. Instead of Diverting, the public choice, showing the way to the judges, Paradisical gathered in the purse and Diverting failed to make a money showing. Pass Up was second and Banish Fear third.

Lillian Uhl was nicely handled by Jockey H. Lindberg. He kept the filly off the sizzling pace set by Vanished, moved around when that one tired and drew out in the stretch to win by a length from Dark Lady and Merry Go Round.

Runs Miserable Race.

Pass Up, from the J. E. Widener string, came out of the stall gate flying in the second half. On the trip along the back stretch, Paradisical and Banish Fear were close by, with Diverting in the second flight. Pass Up proved no match for Paradisical in the stretch, however, and the Axton-owned filly drove over the line. Diverting ran a miserable race, failing to show anything like her previous effort.

Lillian Uhl paid $5.40 and Paradisical, $11.50.

The Wheatley Stable's Grog, trying for the fifth time to escape the maiden ranks, came through in impressive style in the day's opener. After breaking on top of the field, Grog made every post a winning one and led Lemont and Higher Cloud across the line to pay a $4.60 mutuel.

Scotch Soldier gave the favorite players a jolt in the second race. In a stunning upset, he stayed close to the pace set by Toano and when the leader folded he went to the front. General A. was a fast-driving second and would have won in another stride. Vested Power was third, two lengths away. Scotch Soldier paid $50.10.

Broad Meadows Wins.

The $4 favorite, Broad Meadows, scored an easy victory in the third race, leading Screen to the finish line by three lengths. Xandra was beaten a head for the place. Wee Wink winged along in front going up the back stretch and had a long lead when she ran to the outside fence at the turn into the stretch.

White Abel, owner, trainer and jockey, rode a brilliant race on his St. Moritz to win the sixth race from Slave and Fair Countess. Slave was in front most of the way, but Abel put St. Moritz to a winning drive in the stretch. The payoff was $14.90.

Octaroro repeated his recent fine turf race to score in the final. Kindacorn was second and Peedeeque third in the field of nine. The time of 1:43 4-5 was a new record for the course.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—PARADISICAL, $11.50, $5.80, $4.20; PASS UP, $14.00, $7.20; BANISH FEAR, $4.40.

PARADISICAL broke fast, was kept well up under hard urging, closed very fast in stretch, caught PASS UP at sixteenth pole and won going away. PASS UP rushed into lead, was under restraint, but stopped badly when challenged. BANISH FEAR, on the inside, came with a rush in final furlong. INSOMNIA broke a bit slow, but went up gamely and ran a good race. DIVERTING lacked early speed and never was a factor. TWOADAY was outrun.

SIXTH RACE—One mile (out of chute). Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good. Won driving; place, easily. Went to post at 5:07½. Off at 5:12½. Winner, A. J. Abel's b. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—ST. MORITZ, $14.90, $7.50, $6.90; SLAVE, $22.40, $15.30; FAIR COUNTESS, $27.20.

ST. MORITZ, running in his best form, followed pace to the middle of the stretch, where he closed, and won going away. SLAVE rushed into lead, displayed keen speed, and held on well. FAIR COUNTESS was a stout factor all the way. COIL is improving. BALMACAAN made a good effort.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 5:42. Off at 5:43. Winner, R. H. Stable's ch. s. Two-dollar mutuels paid—LILLIAN UHL, $5.40, $2.90, $2.50; DARK LADY, $3.30, $2.70; MERRY GO ROUND, $4.30.

LILLIAN UHL was rated off the early pace, moved into lead in final furlong, drew away, and held race safe. DARK LADY lacked early speed, slipped through on inside, and closed gamely. MERRY GO ROUND was outrun to stretch, where she closed very fast, and would have been second in another stride. CHEWAWA trailed far back in early part, but closed with a rush. SAINT CLEO displayed a good effort and should win soon. VANISHED had speed for five furlongs, then quit, and was pulled up at end. MISS ELEGANCE showed early foot.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—SCOTCH SOLDIER, $50.10, $22.50, $12.90; GENERAL A., $4.40, $3.50; VESTED POWER, $7.30.

SCOTCH SOLDIER, never far from the early pace, came to inside around turn, took lead at furlong pole, and just lasted to win. GENERAL A., badly outrun in early part, came very wide, closed gamely, and just failed to get up. VESTED POWER worked his way up and finished very fast. LUCULENT closed a big gap. TOANO displayed keen speed for six furlongs. He should win a race soon.

THIRD RACE—Seven furlongs (out of chute). Purse, $800; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start poor. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 3:29. Off at 3:33. Winner, R. T. Watts' br. h. (8), by Black Servant—Bit of White. Trained by owner. Value to winner, $600; second, $125; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:25 1-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BROAD MEADOWS, $4.00, $2.70, $2.50; SCREEN, $4.30, $3.40; XANDRA, $4.60.

BROAD MEADOWS ran as if much the best. He assumed lead in stretch, drew away, and won nicely in hand. SCREEN ran into lead on turn and held on well. XANDRA came from far back and was third in final stride. VICTORIUM was weakly ridden in final sixteenth. SAND RUNNER showed a flash of early speed. WEE WINK ran out on stretch turn.

FOURTH RACE—Seven furlongs (out of chute). The Regret (first division). Purse, $1,000. For 3-year-old fillies. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:01. Off at 4:06½. Winner, W. F. Axton's ch. f. (3), by Epinard—Twig. Trained by D. T. Morris. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 1:25 4-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—LILLIAN UHL, $5.40, $2.90, $2.50; DARK LADY, $3.30, $2.70; MERRY GO ROUND, $4.30.

LILLIAN UHL was rated off the early pace, moved into lead in final furlong, drew away, and held race safe. DARK LADY lacked early speed, slipped through on inside, and closed gamely. MERRY GO ROUND was outrun to stretch, where she closed very fast, and would have been second in another stride. CHEWAWA trailed far back in early part, but closed with a rush. SAINT CLEO displayed a good effort and should win soon. VANISHED had speed for five furlongs, then quit, and was pulled up at end. MISS ELEGANCE showed early foot.

FIFTH RACE—Seven furlongs (out of chute). The Regret (second division). Purse, $1,000. For 3-year-old fillies. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:38. Off at 4:39½. Winner, W. F. Axton's b. s. (3), by In Memoriam—Madrigal. Trained by D. T. Morris. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 1:24 4-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—PARADISICAL, $11.50, $5.80, $4.20; PASS UP, $14.00, $7.20; BANISH FEAR, $4.40.

PARADISICAL broke fast, was kept well up under hard urging, closed very fast in stretch, caught PASS UP at sixteenth pole and won going away. PASS UP rushed into lead, was under restraint, but stopped badly when challenged. BANISH FEAR, on the inside, came with a rush in final furlong. INSOMNIA broke a bit slow, but went up gamely and ran a good race. DIVERTING lacked early speed and never was a factor. TWOADAY was outrun.

SIXTH RACE—One mile (out of chute). Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good. Won driving; place, easily. Went to post at 5:07½. Off at 5:12½. Winner, A. J. Abel's b. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—ST. MORITZ, $14.90, $7.50, $6.90; SLAVE, $22.40, $15.30; FAIR COUNTESS, $27.20.

ST. MORITZ, running in his best form, followed pace to the middle of the stretch, where he closed, and won going away. SLAVE rushed into lead, displayed keen speed, and held on well. FAIR COUNTESS was a stout factor all the way. COIL is improving. BALMACAAN made a good effort.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 5:42. Off at 5:43. Winner, R. H. Stable's ch. s. (5), by Man o' War—Malmouna. Trained by H. Jacobs. Value to winner, $600; second, $125; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:43 4-5 (new turf course record).

Two-dollar mutuels paid—OCTARORO, $8.10, $3.80, $3.30; KINDACORN, $4.50, $3.40; PEEDEEQUE, $4.70.

OCTARORO, at home on the turf course, broke fast, rushed into long lead, and held on gamely when challenged by KINDACORN. The latter suffered early interference and came with a powerful rush in stretch. PEEDEEQUE was forced to overcome a lot of interference and closed fast. FLOWERY LADY was well up all the way. BIG RED lacked speed and appeared not to like the turf course.

Dear Al: Hialeah Park, Miami, Fla., Jan. 31.

The races out of the mile chute here are sort of catch-as-catch-can propositions for most of the customers at this beautiful race track. In fact, the mile chute is the only flaw in an otherwise perfect turf plant. The start is placed in such a way that one can see it only from the right-hand side of the clubhouse and a certain spot at the top of the grandstand. There is a shriek from the few who can see and the others take up the cry, "They're off," although it is several seconds before the horses come into sight of every one. Remind me to tell Mr. Widener about that. Mr. Widener, incidentally, has hired an eye expert to examine the horses. One of the boys in the press box wanted to send him over to the judges' stand after Scotch Soldier was called the winner over General A.

Jockey Jake Jacobs, of Washington, D. C., vacationing here, went up to window No. 42 today and asked for No. 6, General A., and the seller accidentally pressed No. 7. Jake wouldn't take the ticket. "That'll cost me that $2; I'll have to hold it," said the seller as he gave Jake No. 6. The No. 7 was Scotch Soldier at a $50 mutuel. "No luck," says Jake, "I'm always doing favors." BILL.

First race—Black Mistress appears to have the edge over this field of maiden jjuvenile fillies. Has plenty of speed and should overcome that inside post position. Beauflower is the one to beat. Armful, far down the list and unlikely to start, has worked well.

Second race—Mantados, with Georgie Watson in the saddle, may upset the talent in this sprint. Races if ready and gets in with only a steadying 110 pounds. Air Line surprised with a smashing second the other day and is dangerous. Bobby Buxton ran a nice race last out and may be heard from.

Third race—This is a very open race. I'm going to string along with Quickly. This one is at tops and is a consistent fellow. Mountain Elk and Judge Schilling, in an entry, will not be far out of it. Luxuro is favored in some circles. Disaster, one that Clocker Mike dug up, is a possible surprise.

Fourth race—Cristate was unequal to the task of defeating Stegal last out when they met at a mile. At seven furlongs I'm going to take the first named. Elwawa to complete the money bracket.

Fifth race—Foxy Agnes has earned a star's ranking hereabouts. She will have to do her best to get home in this company, but I believe she will win. Dowdy Dell for the place. Boston Brook was a very good horse once.

Sixth race—Ahmed will draw Jack Bryson for the saddle work and I see no reason for mistakes. Brass Monkey is at his best and will be the one to trim. Bright Beauty, at her best, could take it all.

Seventh race—Standout closed like a house afire here yesterday and this mile and a quarter should suit his purposes. Tuffy G. and Yellow Metal will go well at the longer route. Mike is going to drop a deuce on the last named.

Best Bet—Cristate.

Bossie Eye Triumphs In Feature at Alamo

San Antonio, Tex., Jan 31 (AP).—Bossie Eye, 3-year-old daughter of Black Servant and Bessie Alix, carried R. N. Vestal's colors to victory today in the President's Birthday Purse, feature event at Alamo Downs.

The filly, after relinquishing the lead in the stretch run, managed to get up in the final strides to win by a neck from American Emblem, which races for the Newton Stable. Treat and Felkner's Here On was third in the field of seven.

Bossie Eye, although a winner only once in her 21 previous starts, was well backed, returning $8.70 for a $2 ticket. Her time for the mile was 1:40.

Roosevelt	0	5	.000

By John R. Vosburgh

THE high school basket ball struggle passes through a grave and stormy crisis this afternoon and a flock of torrid temperatures and high fevers appears likely before the unbeaten league leaders from Eastern either vanquish their runner-up rivals from Western or in turn are squelched by the galloping Georgetowners.

The latter result would throw the series into considerable confusion. A Western victory would come as almost an equal boon to Tech, despite its having lost two games, and the series would swing into the home stretch with three teams very much in the running for the title.

The game is slated for 3:30 p. m. at Tech. In the other inter-high battle, Central faces Roosevelt, at Roosevelt.

Near Series Crown.

On the other hand, an Eastern triumph would virtually seal the championship for the Lincoln Parkers, for they could still lose to Tech and win the crown. The possibility that Roosevelt might beat Eastern is hardly worth considering.

But a Western victory would force Eastern to beat Tech again to win the championship, which is hardly more than an even possibility. Western would still have to win from Central and from Tech should it win today, in order to cop the title. Another victory over Tech for either Eastern or Western is only a matter of a toss-up.

Western's chances of stopping Eastern loom better than 50-50 today. The first time the schools met, Eastern took a 31-24 decision, but the Georgetowners handed the Blue the game by missing enough easy shots to swamp a battleship.

Maloney May Get Call.

In all probability, Capt. Phil Maloney, of Western, will get the call to cover Capt. Lavelle Dean, high scorer of the series and the main spring of the Eastern attack. The issue promises to center on the outcome of this individual duel or on that between Dean and any other Western player assigned him.

Maloney's effective job in keeping Reds Daly scoreless from the floor when Western beat Tech still remains one of the high lights of the series. Maloney, incidentally, tallied 6 points in that game and, with the exception of Dean, is the highest-scoring guard in the series.

Shaner Hobbling.

Eastern's cause is not aided a great deal by a well-sprained ankle which Buddy Shaner, regular center, is carrying around. Dean's ankle is considerably improved, but the member is noticeably swathed in tape, even around the outside of his shoe, while Shaner came out in the Central game hobbling around with enough tape around the outside of his foot to stock a drug store. Ed Miller, substitute center, did not do so well, his principal achievements being in committing three personal fouls.

Either Shaner or Miller will find his hands full with young Joe Hanley, of Western. Hanley held the rampaging John Billings, of Tech, to one basket—none in the first half—until the Westerner was ejected on personals. It was the best guarding Billings has met in the series.

Central appears hardly likely to be upset by Roosevelt despite the game being played on the Ruff Riders' court. Coach Jack Ray of Central has his eyes on next season.

Brouillard to Fight.

Los Angeles, Jan. 31 (AP).—Lou Brouillard, Worcester, Mass., southpaw, was signed today to meet Indian Jimmy Rivers, Fresno, Calif., middleweight, in a ten-round bout here February 5.

Boxing to Regain Popularity When Vaudeville Comes Back, Says Rep. Stewart, Delaware

By Dillon Graham
(Associated Press Sports Writer).

REPRESENTATIVE J. GEORGE STEWART, of Delaware, believes "boxing will regain its oldtime popularity when vaudeville does."

"But," the former member of the Delaware State Athletic Commission said today, "you'll have to figure when vaudeville is coming back."

"Wrestling," he added, "has taken the place of vaudeville. People tired of vaudeville and wrestling muscled into its spot. The fans weren't interested in scientific wrestling. They wanted action, and they got it.

"They like to hear 'em groan and grunt and throw each other out of the ring. When this cycle passes and people begin to go for vaudeville again, I believe they'll go for boxing too."

Delaware's lone Representative helped draft that State's boxing rules when the first commission was formed five years ago. He was a member of the group until after his election in November.

Poor fights and demands for guarantees have hurt the game, he said.

"Boxers might adopt the wrestlers' system and fight for a percentage instead of a guarantee," he continued.

"They should go into a town, give the customers a good battle and build themselves up as a local attraction. Wrestlers have done this and have seen $500 crowds jump to $10,000. If they don't put on a good show, the fans won't return. The same should go for boxers."

"There is no reason for bad decisions," he said, "if you have competent, honest officials."

"We've never had any trouble in Delaware," he explained. "We make sure that our judges know their business and that the fighters are physically fit. Of course, on some of the close battles, the decisions are not going to please everyone."

Delaware uses the 12-point system of judging fights on the basis of aggressiveness, clean blows, blocking, ring generalship, condition and footwork. Stewart's commission was the first in the East to vote 20-round championship fights, he said, and the first to adopt the "no foul" rule.

Two Triumphs Aim of Terps Tomorrow

Virginia Quintet, W. & L. Ringmen Will Invade College Park.

IT MAY BE an all-Maryland affair tomorrow night when the Terps encounter Virginia's courtmen and Washington and Lee's ring team, but not if the visiting Southern gentlemen have their way about it.

Possibly the only all-Maryland event scheduled is the annual "M" Club banquet at which members of the 1934 football squad will be honored. The old grads sit down to the serious business of enjoying themselves at 6:30 p. m., and inasmuch as fried chicken offers little resistance, they should score an easy victory.

Virginia comes to College Park with a record of 7 wins in 12 games after getting off to a slow start. The Cavaliers won their last four games and now rate as one of the darkest dark horses of the Southern Conference. Maryland holds a 14-to-7 edge in their series after winning both games last season. Virginia is out to settle a few of those old scores.

W. & L. Boxers in Debut.

It will be Washington and Lee's first appearance within the ring this season, and although Maryland has been installed as a favorite the Generals are in a good position to upset the Terps. The Lexington line-up includes three aces in Wallie Davis, 125; Ed Jean, 155, and Capt. George Short, 165, and all rate on even terms with their rivals.

Coach Jack Harmony has shifted his line-up to meet the threat, moving Lyman McAboy up to 165 pounds from 155, with either Kelly or Lombardi ready to step into the 155-pound berth.

Three Clubs Entered In Interstate League

Cumberland, Md., Jan. 31 (Spl.). Only three of the eight clubs in the Interstate Baseball League have so far announced that they are ready for the coming season. They are Frostburg Demons, Celanese Athletic Association and American Legion. Danny D'Amico, of Celanese, announced that a playing manager would be signed and the club sponsors have their eyes on Joe Barley, outfielder-second sacker of the Potomac Edison champions.

C. U.'s Boxers To Taper Off For Duke

Visitors Made Choices as LaFond Lists Shifts in Line-up.

AS FIT as two fiddles and anxious to try their knuckles on one of the Southern Conference's prize aggregations, Catholic University's ringmen taper off this afternoon after a week of diligent training for tomorrow's matches with Duke at Brookland.

Both teams are undefeated and the Cardinals have no intention of spoiling their record this late in the season. But Duke has its own idea on the subject, and the Blue Devils carry a wallop to support their convictions.

As requests for tickets continued to flood his office, Arthur J. Bergman, director of athletics, last night predicted the first sell-out of the season. As now arranged the gym will accommodate about 3,500 fans.

Duke Is Favored.

Duke was installed as a 6-5 favorite over Catholic yesterday as Coach Eddie LaFond announced three changes in the Redbird line-up. George Mulligan will replace Danny Pyne in the heavyweight class, while Max Bringkman will handle the 165-pound assignment and Carman LaSalle the 145-pound bout.

The Blue Devil line-up will be the same that thrashed Richmond and South Carolina on successive week-ends and then tied with Clemson. Capt. Fred Lloyd, acclaimed the class of the conference 125-pounders; Jack Kneipp, 135, and Ray Matulewicz, 165, are undefeated, and Coach Ad Warren counts on them to win tomorrow.

Opposes Restaino.

But Lloyd will not win without out-slugging one of Catholic's grittiest and cleverest men, Angy Restaino. Restaino proved his mettle last week against Lou Rubenstein, Temple southpaw, when he got up after being floored three times, and won the decision, almost knocking Rubenstein out in the final round.

Kneipp has fought and whipped three tough men, but he too must be at his best to win from Thibideau, who is undefeated Matulewicz has more experience, is faster and cleverer than Max Brinkman, whom he meets, but the former Tech High School lad is rugged and can punch a bit himself.

Catholic's best bet is big Red Fleming, 175-pounder, who won his two former fights by knockouts. Fleming meets Don Schmit, supposedly a 'comer,' who if half as good as rated should wage a good, tough fight.

N. C. State Ring Team Primed for Tarheels

Raleigh, N. C., Jan. 31 (Spl.). State College's ring team hopes to spring a surprise or two on the strong Carolina team when the rival clubs clash Saturday night at Chapel Hill.

There has been a lot of hard, determined work in State's training camp this week and the team does not appear upset over the possibility of having to forfeit the 115 and 175 pound weights to Carolina because of lack of material.

Capt. Jack Fabri will head the State delegation and will meet Capt. Giddens in the feature match. Fabri will move up from the 155 to the 165 that he might meet Giddens, an old foe, and to make room for Dick Parker, a newcomer, in the 155.

Wright, of Generals, Is Declared Ineligible

Lexington, Va., Jan. 31 (AP).—Giles Wright, regarded by Coach Cy Young as a "very promising sophomore" on Washington and Lee's basket ball squad, was today declared ineligible for further participation this season because of scholastic difficulties. This cuts the Generals' defending championship squad to 11 men.

Dodgers Sign Phelps.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Jan. 31 (AP).—The Brooklyn Dodgers, of the National League, today announced that Gordon (Babe) Phelps, catcher recently acquired from the Chicago Cubs, had sent in his signed contract for the 1935 season.

Cards Subdue D.-E. Five, 33 to 26

Schmarr, With 19 Points, Leads C. U. Attack; Rally Decisive.

HERMIE SCHMARR and four other boys from Catholic University plastered a 33-26 defeat on Davis-Elkins last night at Brookland in a game that produced more thrills than a dime detectice novel.

With the dangerous Dutchman leading the way, C. U. staged an eleventh-hour raid on Davis-Elkins' basket that converted what had been a close, bitterly contested battle into a walkaway. Davis-Elkins led at the intermission, 15-14, after the lead exchanged hands three times.

See-Saw Play Continues.

After its amazing comeback against George Washington on Wednesday night, the 500 customers in attendance sat back and waited for a similar spurt by the West Virginians, but it never materalized. No less than five times did the lead see saw in the final period, but when Catholic finally recaptured it at 22 to 20, it stayed put.

The Scarlet Hurrican died down to a mere breeze in the last three minutes of play, when the Redbirds galloped out in front, piling up point after point. Davis-Elkins resorted to long shots, but they were wild and short of the mark.

Missouri Gets Bill To Legalize Wagers

Jefferson City, Mo., Jan. 31 (AP).—A bill to legalize pari-mutuel wagering on horse races in Missouri was introduced in the House today by Edgar J. Keating, Kansas City Democrat. A similar bill is pending in the Senate.

The Keating bill would give 25 per cent of the State's revenue from horse racing to the State department of agriculture for the development of pure-bred horses and mules, 25 per cent to the State and county fairs and 50 per cent to county courts.

Alabama May Oppose Coast Eleven in Fall

San Francisco, Jan. 31 (AP).—Football circles here heard today there was a possibility the University of Alabama might play a post-season game in this section next fall, with either its recent Rose Bowl rival, Stanford, or Santa Clara.

While no direct negotiations were under way, Coach Frank Thomas was quoted through an intermediary as saying he would like to come to San Francisco to play one of the bay district teams, if the proper guarantee is offered.

Both Stanford and Santa Clara officials expressed interest.

"We wish primarily to take care of those two boresome hours between cocktails at 4:30 p. m. and dinner at 6:30 p. m.," said Mrs. Roberts. "And, secondly, we wish to rescue the game of caroms from the professionals. We wish to bring the game back to the amateurs of society, where it originated."

It seems that since it became the vogue for bluebloods to move from their suburban summer estates into Park avenue penthouses and apartments in winter, both pool and billiards have suffered. Space being at such a premium in the city, few of them installed tables. And, of course, the debbies and matrons would not think of playing in ordinary billiard parlors. So the big idea was to found a club where the better sort of men and women might play. Thus came into being this sort of Mayfair on tables.

Of course, there will be instructors. None other than Charles C. Peterson, of St. Louis, the world's outsanding professional trick shot artist, was showing novices just how to hold the cue tonight. Peterson gave an exhibition of difficult billiard shots. His work was "simply fascinating" and "simply adorable."

Mrs. Roberts said the club planned to bring back the old game of four-ball billiards, instead of three, to make it easier for beginners to score.

Peden and Audy, Bicycle Aces, Visitors Here; Eye World Title

By Dave Herman.

WILLIAM (TORCHY) PEDEN and Jules Audy, internationally famous six-day cycling stars, who are in Washington as the guests of Miss Jane Bartleman, have but one ambition — and it's a mighty big one.

PEDEN.

These young Canadians, who will reveal the secret of their success before a group of sportsmen and sports writers at a party to be given in their honor by Miss Bartleman today, want to be the greatest bicycle team the world has ever known.

Torchy, a giant of a fellow weighing 225 pounds, looks more like a heavyweight boxer than a cycling champion. He was recognized as the world's six-day champion in 1932 and 1933, and has piled up enough points this year, he believes, to retain his laurels.

In sharp contrast to Torchy is Jules Audy, short, with platinum blond hair, a dead ringer for the movie star, Gene Raymond.

Peden, red-headed, fell heir to the nickname Torchy a few years ago when he won an important race in Canada. He peddled around the track with such amazing speed that a sports writer referred to him as a flaming torch on wheels. Torchy is 29, and his diminutive partner, 22.

A member of the 1928 Canadian Olympic team, Peden turned pro in 1929. He coached the Canadians in the 1932 Olympics. In 55 professional races Peden has won 27, finished second ten times, third three times and fourth five times.

Once he was paced by a motorcycle and averaged 76½ miles an hour. Peden won three six-day championships in Madison Square Garden. In 1932 he teamed with Reggie McNamara for his first victory, and in December of that year he won again with Fred Spencer. Alfred LeTourneur was with him when he triumphed in 1933. LeTourneur and Gerard Debeats won the 1934 championship.

None other than Franco Giorgetti, 1927, 1928 and 1930 champion, has teamed with Peden in races. The six-day world title is determined on the amount of wins and places during the season.

Asked if there was money in cycling, Peden stated:

"Giorgetti has made more than any other star. He earned $40,000 in the boom year of 1928, but nowadays a crack cyclist can make between $10,000 and $15,000 a season.

Neither Peden nor Audy smokes or drinks. They have to watch their diet when in training for the races, they said. The result of this good training enables them to finish a race as fresh as when they started, they claim.

Peden hopes to emulate the feats of Piet Van Kempen, who has won 29 of the most important six-day championships. The big Canadian also has won the longest road race—a 2,000-mile jaunt in Canada.

Boxing Line-up Is Revised by Columbus

Veterans to Start in All Eight Places Against M. I. T. Tomorrow.

A REVISED Columbus University boxing line-up, announced yesterday, will give the "Skippers" a veteran mittman in all of the eight positions and no less than an even chance of winning over Massachusetts Institute of Technology tomorrow night at Tech High School.

The change will send Johnny McKinney from the 175-pound class to heavyweight with Bobby Schwartz, brother of Alexandria's "Baker Boy" Billy Schwartz, inserted in the vacated notch. The remainder of the line-up will be unchanged.

To Meet Huryla.

McKinney will face Michael Huryla, Tech's hard-punching Mexican heavyweight, and reputedly the outstanding battler of the squad. Schwartz will pair off with Walter Mathesius, a veteran of two years' experience.

The visitors are scheduled to arrive this afternoon, with Coach Tommy Rawson, formerly one of New England's outstanding lightweights, in charge. Both teams will weigh in tomorrow.

Olympics Still a Year Away, But Fever Grips Alpine Fans

By Paul Gallico.

GARMISCH-PARTENKIRCHEN (by mail).—Looking back over many years associated with the writing of sport, I can think of no time that has ever been as thrilling, exciting, stimulating, brilliant and heart-warming in retrospect as that summer month in 1932 during the Olympic games in Los Angeles, Calif. There was so much life, and color, youth and adventure, achievement and whatnot that I know I shall never forget it.

We are still a year away, but the unmistakable stamp of the Olympia is already on these charming, picturesque towns set in a valley and surrounded by the Bavarian Alps. There is even an undercurrent of suppressed anticipatory excitement. The German winter sport championships are about to take place here now, but everyone knows that it is just a rehearsal for the Olympics. The ice stadium, the gigantic ski-jump stadium, and the bob-run are already completed and in use. There is nothing left but the building of additional grandstands at these various sites to bring the seating capacity up to the crowds expected.

When the last grandstand is added to the ice stadium, it will hold 10,000. The ice surface for fancy skating and hockey is 60 meters long by 30 meters wide. It is completely modern from the huge artificial ice-making plant which will make ice in 3 hours, and refreeze a scarred surface in 5 minutes, to the electric time clocks at one end and the huge and completely equipped press tower at the other. Incidentally, the press accommodations at every turn are not haphazard afterthoughts, but are carefully planned and arranged to give the correspondents every advantage and comfort. (Yale Bowl, please copy.)

The most grandiose layout, however, is the ski-jump stadium at the foot of the gudiberg, where are built the two jumps, the short one and the big Olmpic jump, where it is fully expected that the champions will reach a jump of 100 meters next year. At the bottom of the jump is a large horseshoe, consisting of two huge, curved stands on the two wings and in the center of which has been built a new stone sporthouse and restaurant. Grandstands also have been built so that the correspondents may see the jump from the side.

The scale of everything is colossal. The whole side of the mountain has been rebuilt and landscaped and manicured. But the cleverest stunt of all in connection with the construction of the Olympic Ski Stadium is the use of a sport field at the base of the mountain for the landing place of the jumpers. At the foot of each jump is a large open, snow covered space, that is, it takes care of the two jumps. In the summer time, this is a big athletic field with a 400-meter cinder track, jumping pits, etc. The same grandstands that cover the ski jump likewise serve for track meets in the summer.

60 Stars to Vie In D. C. Swim Tonight

Records in All 7 Events to Be Imperiled in Shoreham Meet.

BESIDES hitting a new all-time high for competitive swimming events in Washington, the District A. A. U.'s massive meet at the Shoreham pool at 8 o'clock holds plenty of promise of hitting the local record books with an assault strong enough to shake the records loose from cover to cover.

The big, fast field of 64 competitors is expected either to wipe out or to test to the limit records in each of the seven races on the program. With the heats being run on a time basis instead of by elimination and final heats, the chances of the standards being lowered are considerably increased.

In the main event, the national junior 220-yard breast stroke mark of 2 minutes 59 2-5 seconds, set by Dyer Ghormley, George Washington University star athlete and District champion, appears fated for oblivion. Ghormley himself may be the one to set the new mark, being rated only slightly under Ezra Cukor and Karl Neumzig, of the Dragon Club A. C., Brooklyn, the favorites.

Breast Stroke Battle.

Simon Lubin, of the Philadelphia College of Osteopathy, Middle Atlantic champion, and Homan Kinsley, of the Baltimore "Y", South Atlantic champion, will subject to a keen test the mark of 2:30 set by Max Rote, of George Washington, last year for the 220-yard freestyle. Beverley Carter, former Duke star and Southern Conference 220-yard champion, appears to be Washington's best hope in this race.

The time of 2:18 for the women's 150-yard medley, held by Betty O'Toole, of the Shoreham, gets one of the toughest trials of the evening with a field entered including Marie Glazier, of Philadelphia, Middle Atlantic champion; Jean Kozlinski, of Milwaukee, Central A. A. U. champion; Margaret Russell, of Baltimore, South Atlantic champion, and Leonora Taube and Miss O'Toole, District outdoor and indoor title holders, as well as a number of other visiting and local stars.

Duke Team to Oppose V. M. I.'s Five Tonight

Durham, N. C., Jan. 31 (Spl.).—In the first of a pair of important Southern Conference games scheduled for the week-end, Duke University's cagers play hosts to V. M. I. in Duke gym at 8:15 p. m. tomorrow. The undefeated Duke freshmen will play a preliminary game with Belmont Abbey at 7:15 o'clock.

The game with the Cadets will open a two-game home stand for the Blue Devils. Saturday night they replay the finals of the 1934 Southern Conference tournament with Washington and Lee's champions.

Alexandrians In Road Trip Today

To Meet Waynesboro High; Lee-Jackson Faces Falls Church.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Jan. 31 (Spl.).—Lee-Jackson High School will meet Falls Church, Fairfax County leader, tomorrow in what promises to be a close game. Alexandria High will journey to Waynesboro, Va., to face the high school team of that town.

Lee-Jackson has been handicaped by a green squad this season.

The newly organized Junior Basket Ball League met tonight, and Earl Cronin, former St. John's Prep star, was announced as the referee. Eligibility lists will be submitted Saturday.

The meeting of St. Mary's Celtic baseball team was postponed tonight.

Columbia Firemen will face a team yet to be selected at the Armory Hall at 8:30 p. m. tomorrow. It will be a District quintet. Fort Hunt and DeMolay clash in the preliminary.

St. Rita's girls will play in the Washington Recreation League Monday, facing Garfield in Hines Junior High gymnasium.

President of 'M' Club To Boost Card Over Air

Maj. L. M. Silvester, president of the "M" Club of the University of Maryland, will speak over WMAL at 6:30 p. m. today about the football banquet and basket ball and boxing double-header that will be given at College Park tomorrow night.

Wheat Values Point Higher; Close Steady

Cotton Prices Fluctuate on Gold Clause Fears; May Cut to 12.42.

Chicago, Jan. 31 (AP).—Stirred by supposed inflationary possibilities of Washington Senate and House approval of permission for 11½ billion dollars of additional bonds, grain prices avreaged higher today.

Bullish effects of renewal of inflation talk were augmented by the approach of the next sitting of the United States Supreme Court, and by suggestions in some quarters that gold clause cases were likely to be decided favorably to the Government. Attention was also given to unvarying excess shown of late by primary domestic shipments of wheat and corn as compared with wheat.

After scoring maximum gains of around a cent a bushel, wheat and corn closed firm, wheat unchanged to ½ cent higher; May, 96¼-⅜; corn, ⅛-¾ up; May, 84⅛-¼; oats, unchanged to ¾ advance, and provisions showing 12 to 50 cents gain.

Speculative profit-taking sales at the last were responsible for setbacks from the day's top prices for grains. An upward trend which prevailed here most of the time, both in wheat and corn, was in the face of weakness displayed by the Liverpool wheat market owing to a forecast of large shipments of wheat this week from Argentina, 4,425,000 bushels, against 3,561,000 a year ago. On the other hand, some improvement of domestic flour business was noted.

For the most part, corn and oats followed wheat.

Provisions were responsive to grain strength and to some pick-up in lard export trade.

Cotton Market

New York, Jan. 31 (AP).—Cotton prices fluctuated narrowly in a dull market today, closing steady net 2 points lower to 1 higher.

The day's reports from Washington on the hearing before the Senate Agricultural Committee came in for comparatively little attention, but traders are awaiting further developments in that quarter as well as the gold clause decisions.

According to a survey by a local crop reporting authority, planting intentions in the South at the end of this month point to an acreage of about 32,292,000 acres under cultivation compared with last year's acreage planted of 28,412,000.

Liverpool cables reported a quiet market there with incentives lacking and little trading featured beyond some trade support of near months.

Cottonseed Oil.

Bleachable cottonseed oil closed firm today, 5 to 13 points net higher. Total sales were 58 contracts and this business centered largely in two positions, May and July. A sharp advance in lard, together with a higher market for crude oil and the forecast of a substantial decrease in lard stocks at Chicago during January were factors accounting for this situation. There was a good demand from houses with cotton and Southern connections for these active months. Bleachable spot nominal; March closed, 11.00; May, 11.15; July, 11.20; September, 11.20.

Proposed International Negotiations to Reach a World Cotton Agreement Find Pessimistic Reactions by Majority, Observer Says.

New York, Jan. 31.—The cotton trade is far from enthusiastic about the prospect of substantial results from the proposed international negotiations to reach a world cotton agreement. Practical cotton men here call attention to the failure of the world wheat agreement, and add that the difficulties in the way of a successful cotton agreement would be much greater.

They cannot see how, having already curtailed our crop and maintained our price at an artificially high level, we can make sufficient further concessions to induce other countries to reduce their cotton production or exports. They feel that nothing short of a profound change in our governmental policy, to permit the world price of American cotton to find a lower and more competitive level, would suffice to halt further expansion in the volume of foreign production of the staple, and thus permit us to maintain, let alone to regain, our foreign markets.

It is true that the recent sharp rise in quotations of foreign growths of cotton in world marts has eliminated a substantial part of the adverse price differential which has existed against American cotton. As a result, some leading observers in the trade are currently more hopeful of our export position, at least for the near future. However, this improvement in our relative position, on a price basis, in the world cotton markets can not endure, since higher prices for foreign growths in themselves stimulate larger production abroad. Increased foreign output in the future will tend to widen once again the disparity between American and other cotton prices, as long as we follow the policy of acreage curtailment and price pegging through the Government's offer of a loan of 12 cents a pound on new crop cotton.

While a general international agreement, to embrace all leading cotton growing countries, is regarded as unlikely, some practical students of the cotton situation concede the possibility of arriving at an agreement on the subject with Brazil which could prove helpful.

Cotton Men Look to Trade Agreement With Brazil.

An increasing number of cotton men are coming to the conclusion that Brazil is at the crux of our cotton problem, as far as export markets are concerned. Egypt, owing to limitations on suitable acreage and labor, is held unlikely to enlarge her production on an important scale with or without an agreement. Russia and China will probably absorb most, if not all, of the future increases in their production themselves. The same is largely true of India.

On the other hand, as measured by the extent of the acreage she possesses suitable for cotton cultivation, the natural fertility of her soil, and the costs of production and transportation, Brazil is potentially fully the equal, perhaps the superior, of the United States as a cotton grower. American, as well as British and Brazilian, studies of the situation are largely agreed upon this. A number of difficulties which have stood in the way of the rapid extension of cotton cultivation and marketing in Brazil are being gradually eliminated. A shortage of trained labor is now the most serious handicap, a difficulty rendered the greater by immigration laws, but this is expected in well-informed quarters merely to retard, not to prevent, a continuation of the rapid expansion of cotton production in Brazil. The crop during the current crop year is now estimated by the New York Cotton Exchange Service at 1,100,000 bales, as compared with 807,000 last year, and an average outturn from 1924 to 1928 of only 483,000 bales.

International Organizations Have Set Up Branches in Brazil.

The large international spot cotton merchants have now established substantial organizations in Brazil, and are doing effective educational work as well as a substantial amount of business. Members of two of the largest American firms have just recently returned from special trips to that country. There can be no question that our cotton trade expects further expansion of real importance in the cotton crop of Brazil.

Now it is well known that the United States is by far the largest consumer of Brazilian coffee, that country's most important export commodity. It is further a fact that in some fairly substantial degree coffee and cotton are competitors for Brazilian soil, and particularly Brazilian labor. Large coffee surpluses and low coffee prices are without question largely responsible for the extraordinary increase in Brazilian cotton production in recent years.

It is believed that a marked improvement in the coffee situation would doubtless retard further advances in cotton production. Is there anything that the United States could do in the way of offering a coffee "quid pro quo" to Brazil, cotton men ask, in return for an undertaking on the part of that country to retard further cotton development? For the time being, most cotton men, while disclaiming any special knowledge of the coffee situation, are frankly skeptical. This conclusion, plus a firm belief that our cotton position is now being seriously challenged, explains the earnestness with which various leaders in the cotton trade are urging changes in the cotton policies of the Government at this time.

Bond Market Changes Little As Sales Drop

Federals Record Declines While Corporates Firm; Trading $10,295,000.

New York, Jan. 31 (AP).—The bond market was fairly quiet but irregular today with total transfers amounting to $10,295,000, a slight decrease from the previous day's trading.

U. S. Government issues, including those guaranteed by the Federal authority, were off from 1-32 to 9-32 of a point generally, but trading was light.

Firmness was displayed at many points by high grade corporate issues and some strength was shown in the lower grades.

Tobacco Products Call.

An unusual feature of the day's bond news was the fortwith call for redemption by Tobacco Products Corporation of its 6½ per cent debentures. The issues sold at a premium of ⅜ of a point in the morning, and the announcement that they were due and payable today made them automatically worth only 100.

Gains of a fraction to a point or more were registered in many second-grade issues, but there were others in the list that declined fractions.

Among loans that had added value at the close were Denver & Rio Grande consolidated 4s at 34, Erie refunding and improvement 5s at 69, Metropolitan Edison 4½s at 99¼, Nassau Electric 4s at 58⅞, Northern Pacific 3s at 75, Otis Steel 6s at 85½, Studebaker 6s certificates at 47½ and Utility Power & Light 5½s at 28½.

Foreign List Steady.

The foreign list was generally steady, with some Brazilian issues lower. Most Chilean bonds were higher.

The Associated Press averages for 20 railroads, 10 industrials and 10 low-yield bonds were off slightly, while the composites for 10 utilities and 10 foreign bonds rose fractions.

Total transactions for January amounted to $332,726,000, against a December total of $272,869,000.

Daily Crude Oil Output Climbs 10,800 Barrels

Total for Past Week Placed at 2,542,100 Barrels by Institute.

New York, Jan. 31 (AP).—Daily average gross crude oil production in the United States increased 10,800 barrels in the week ended January 26, totaling 2,542,100 barels, the American Petroleum Institute's weekly summary indicates. Daily average production east of California increased 13,800 barrels to 2,035,500 barrels.

Refineries representing 89.8 per cent of estimated total capacity, operated at 67.4 per cent of their capacity, reported daily average runs of crude oil to stills as 2,299,000 barrels.

Unfinished gasoline stocks totaled 4,963,000 barrels against 5,096,000 barrels.

Daily average the previous week for refineries representing 89.8 per cent of total, operated at 68.8 per cent of capacity was 2,347,000 barrels.

Finished Stocks Increase.

Finished gasoline stocks at refineries totaled 29,557,000 barrels to 28,688,000.

Daily average cracked gasoline by refineries representing 95.6 per cent of total charging capacity was 465,000 barrels. Daily average the previous week by refineries representing 95.6 per cent of total was 473,000 barrels.

Imports of crude and refined oils at principal United States ports totaled 562,000 barrels, a daily average of 80,286 barrels, against 658,000 barrels, a daily average of 94,000 barrels for the previous week.

Daily Credit of Reserve Banks Averages $2,000,000 Lower

The daily average of volume of Federal Reserve Bank credit outstanding during the week ended January 30 was $2,466,000,000, a decrease of $2,000,000 compared with the preceding week and of $174,000,000 compared with the corresponding week in 1934.

On January 30 total Reserve bank credit amounted to $2,460,000,000, a decrease of $3,000,000 for the week. This decrease corresponds with an increase of $79,000,000 in monetary gold stock offset in part by increases of $11,000,000 in money circulation, $41,000,000 in member bank reserve balances, $13,000,000 in Treasury cash and deposits with Federal Reserve banks and $7,000,000 in non-member deposits and other Federal Reserve accounts, and by a decrease of $3,000,000 in Treasury and national bank currency.

Holdings of bills discounted declined $2,000,000 and industrial advance increased $1,000,000. An increase of $5,000,000 in holdings of United States Treasury notes was offset by a decrease of $5,000,000 in Treasury bills.

Stocks Gain Fractions in Dull Trading

Federal Aviation Group Report Cancels Rise in Aircraft Shares.

New York, Jan. 31 (AP).—Traders in stocks and commodities again today appeared to take a little more interest in the constructive side of the markets, but the continuing undertone of caution was still apparent in the curtailed volume of transactions.

Aviation shares found a following in early dealings as traders hopefully awaited publication of the Federal Aviation Commission's year-long study of the industry. When it finally appeared in the late afternoon, accompanied by President Roosevelt's remark that the profit motive in commercial aviation should be a "secondary consideration," most of the earlier enthusiasm waned.

Aircraft Shares Fluctuate.

Gains of fractions to around a point or so in some of the aircraft issues were canceled and most closed about even on the day. Steels made a fair showing as the market digested the prediction of a trade publication that the rise in operations might be extended a further 10 per cent before a leveling off set in.

Nibbling at the preferred list continued. Some senior issues able to get up 1 to 2 points included American Woolen, Chicago Pneumatic Tool, Colorado Fuel, Republic Steel Certificates, Wheeling Steel, National Supply and New York Shipbuilding. Mathieson Alkali preferred lifted 7 points on a 10-share lot to 143.

Stock transfers for the session aggregated 524,930 shares, and the Associated Press average for 60 issues advanced .34 of a point to 38.81. Transactions for the month of January totaled 19,414,000 shares compared with 23,400,000 in December and 54,565,000 in January, 1934.

S. E. C. Publicity Discounted.

No special repercussions of the publication for the first time of the full list of stock holdings of officers and directors in their corporations, as required by the securities act, appeared in the market. There were few surprises in the list of some 1,200 names, early examination of the bulky tomes indicated, as most of the more important information had already appeared in the press from Washington sources.

Bethlehem Steel dipped into the black ink bottle in 1934, as its report after the close revealed. Net income was $550,511, compared with a net loss of $8,735,723 in the previous year. Most of the year's profits were earned in the final quarter, when operations were at 34.9 per cent of capacity.

Federal Reserve and member banks reports for the week revealed a continued piling up of reserves to new high levels. However, the excess of reserves over legal requirements showed little, if any, increase during the week, it was said in informed quarters, because of an increase in deposits of the New York member institutions and a moderate rise in the amount of note circulation.

United Air Lines Boost Operation Figures During '34

Chicago, Jan. 30 (AP).—Operation figures for 1934 released today by United Air Lines showed a 15 per cent increase in passengers, 127 per cent increase in express and a substantially enlarged volume of air mail, after allowance for the 90-day period during which all air mail contracts were canceled.

The company said its planes, flying 14,000,000 miles, carried 147,139 passengers, compared with 127,693 in 1933. Express tonnage rose from 234 tons to 547 tons and during the nine months of 1934 it carried 3,245,742 pounds of mail, compared with 3,182,165 pounds during the full year of 1933.

Curb's Prices Close Higher In Light Sales

Early Gains Leveled Near Close; Sales Rise to 127,000 Shares.

New York, Jan. 31 (AP).—A slight upturn in prices developed on the Curb Exchange today. Improvement was shaded near the close, however. Activity continued generally restricted, transfers approximating 127,000 shares, compared with 108,000 the day previous.

Principal variations were among specialties. Dow Chemical got up 3½ points, while advances of around a point or so were registered by Pittsburgh Plate Glass, American Cities Power & Light, Pan American Airways, Todd Shipbuilding, Swift Internacionale and Pratt & Lambert. American Cyanamid "B," Parker Rustproof, Pioneer Gold and Swift & Co. were small fractions higher.

BANKRUPTCY NOTICES

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, holding a Bankruptcy Court. In the matter of Samuel S. Bailey, 900 Nineteenth street northwest, bankrupt, In Bankruptcy No. 3190. To the creditors of Samuel S. Bailey, of the City of Washington, District of Columbia: Notice is hereby given that on the 22d day of January, 1935, the said Samuel S. Bailey was duly adjudicated bankrupt, and that the first meeting of his creditors will be held at my office in the Investment Building, Fifteenth and K streets northwest, Washington, D. C., on the 13TH DAY OF FEBRUARY, 1935, at 10:30 o'clock a. m., at which time the said creditors may attend, prove their claims (claims shall not be proved against the bankrupt estate subsequent to six months after the adjudication as stated above), appoint a trustee, examine the bankrupt and transact such other business as may properly come before said meeting. FRED J. EDEN, Referee in Bankruptcy.

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, holding a Bankruptcy Court. In the matter of Lewis Augustavus Wehrle, Bankrupt, In Bankruptcy, No. 3153. Notice is hereby given that the above-named bankrupt has filed his petition praying for a discharge from all his debts in bankruptcy, and that his creditors and other persons in interest are required to enter their appearance in opposition, together with specifications in writing of the grounds of such opposition, if any so desire, in the clerk's office of said court on or before the 5TH DAY OF MARCH, 1935. FRED J. EDEN, Referee in Bankruptcy.

LEGAL NOTICES

LAWRENCE KOENIGSBERGER, Attorney, Woodward Building.

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. Eugene Young et al., Plaintiffs, vs. Benjamin F. Frazier, et al., Defendants. No. 55069, Equity docket 122. The object of this suit is to obtain the appointment of a trustee or trustees under a deed of trust executed by the defendants and recorded in Liber 5785, at Folio 122, et seq. of the Land Records of the District of Columbia, the trustees therein named having resigned; on motion of the plaintiffs, it is this 10TH DAY OF JANUARY, 1935, ordered that the defendants, Benjamin F. Frazier and Ruth L. Frazier, cause their appearances to be entered herein on or before the fortieth day exclusive of Sundays and legal holidays, occurring after the day of the first publication of this order; otherwise the cause will be proceeded with as in case of default. Provided, a copy of this order be published once a week for three successive weeks in the Washington Law Reporter and The Washington Post before said day. JESSE C. ADKINS, Justice. A true copy. Test: (Seal) FRANK E. CUNNINGHAM, clerk. By H. E. LEE GOFF, Assistant clerk. 1-8-15-22-29-2-5.

SALE OF REPOSSESSED
PIANOS
Doing a very large volume of business it is only natural that we would have a few repossessions from time to time. We put these instruments in the best of condition and sell them to any one who will take over the balance of the payments. Listed below is our present stock.

SMALL SIZE mahogany-finished upright. This instrument has been used for quite a while, but we have rebuilt it thoroughly. Very unusual at $145. Just continue the weekly payments of $1.50.

SMALLEST SIZE apartment grand; in fine condition. Modeled in the popular William and Mary period style. Ideal for the small home or apartment. Seldom are we able to offer so much value for $166. Just continue the weekly payments of $1.50.

APARTMENT UPRIGHT—Used less than 4 months, and we don't believe it can be told from new. One of the latest and most popular styles. A really good piano that you can buy for $6 monthly (total $218).

LATEST MODEL colonial baby grand; finished in mahogany. Used for only 5 months and in perfect condition. Can be purchased for $288. The payments are $2.50 weekly. This piano will sell fast, so if interested see it today.

MAHOGANY BABY GRAND
Here's a piano that is about 4 years old, but it has had better than average care, and, in addition, we have gone over it thoroughly. A good, sturdy instrument that will give years of satisfactory service. Pay $3.00 weekly—total $295.

LOUIS XV model baby grand; finished in walnut. Used for 3 months, it shows absolutely no wear. A real value at $375. Just continue the monthly payments of $10.

BABY GRAND—A colonial model mahogany-finished instrument, used less than six months. One of the better makes, and in absolutely new condition. At $490 it is one of the finest values we have ever offered. The payments are $12.50 monthly.

More Weather.

It was a bright and sunny day, on which no mortal should complain; but I hear Jasper Jenkins say, "We need a heavy, soaking rain. The subsoil's dryer than a bone, too dry for anything to grow; a heavy rain, and that alone, will ease the farmers of their woe." I say, "The rain will come in time, and make the good old subsoil damp; upon a day that's so sublime, the man who grumbles is a scamp. The sun is shining overhead, the breeze is mild, the skies are blue; we should be glad we are not dead, nor worry over troubles due." But Jasper still is full of woe, he says, with passion and with heat, "Some six or seven feet of snow would be a blessing to the wheat. The crops have failed for seven years because the snowfall has been slight; it makes me shed unmanly tears, it makes me walk the floor by night. I do not care for balmy days, for azure skies or things like those; I'd like to see the farmers raise all kinds of corn in stately rows." "And so would I, I must admit," I say to Jasper, as we walk; "If worrying would make a hit, I'd worry with you round the block. But wails won't make potatoes grow, or make the fields of barley thrive, and so I say let's cut out woe and just be glad we are alive. The farmers still will raise their oats and cucumbers and early peas, they'll market large and thrifty shoats, and furnish milk for cottage cheese. The rain they need will be supplied, to help the spud, the corn, the bean, and we shall let the subsoil slide, and romp together on the green."

APPLE MARY — Post Comics on the Air—Sundays, 8:45 a. m.—WMAL — By Martha Orr

YOU'VE BEEN PRETTY CARELESS WITH YOUR REMARKS, LATELY, SPROCKETT, BUT WE'LL DISCUSS ALL THAT IN ONE OF THE UPSTAIRS ROOMS, WE WON'T BE INTERRUPTED THERE.
OH, GEE, I HEAR MR. CRAFTEE COMING UP THE STAIRS, NOW. I WISH I WAS OUTTA HERE—WHAT IF HE OPENS THAT DOOR?
THAT'S THE NURSERY, CRAFTEE. I DON'T WANT TO GO IN THERE. REMINDS ME TOO MUCH OF HOW YOU STOLE THIS PROPERTY. FOR THE OIL ON IT.
SHUT UP, YOU FOOL!
YOU'RE IN THIS AS DEEP AS I AM. I'VE GOT PLENTY ON YOU.
YEAH, WELL, THAT GOES DOUBLE.

OH, OH! THAT SNAKE BROWNING, TO ACCEPT AN ENVELOPE FULL OF PAPERS THAT DIDN'T BELONG TO HIM. OH NO WONDER I FELT SO WEAK WHEN MONTGOMERY PHONED TO SAY HE HAD LOST THE ENVELOPE AND...
THERE'S THE BELL NOW. IT MUST BE MONTY.
PEGGY, WAIT! BEFORE YOU OPEN THAT DOOR... OH HOW CAN WE FACE THAT NICE MAN AND TELL HIM..?
WHY, IT'S DAD!
OH HELLO, EVERYBODY. THANKS FOR THE QUICK SERVICE.
WELL, I HAD A LONG TALK WITH THE MAYOR'S COUSIN TODAY ON THE FEEDING OF ANIMALS AT THE ZOO AND...
OH DAD, WE'RE IN A MESS.
THAT SNAKE, BROWNING, GOT SOME PAPERS..
PAPERS! WHAT PAPERS?
THEY WERE IN AN ENVELOPE. I FOUND IT IN THE HALL. IT HAD THE INITIALS J.B. ON IT.
MOTHER, PLEASE, NOT SO LOUD
JUST AFTER BROWNING GRABBED THE ENVELOPE AND RAN OUT OF HERE, MR. EL DORADO PHONED TO ASK IF WE HAD FOUND AN ENVELOPE. WELL, MY HEAD JUST SWAM AND..
THE BELL AGAIN! IT'S MONTY. I'LL LET HIM IN.

THERE'S NO QUESTION ABOUT IT, OSCAR. THAT WOMAN LOOKS JUST LIKE THE PICTURE IN THIS LOCKET.
WE'RE GOING TO TRY AN 'XPERIMENT! NOW BE QUIET.
OH MOTHER!
BANG CLATTER
THAT TRUCK! IT WOULD COME ALONG WITH ALL THAT RACKET! SHE DIDN'T HEAR US!
CLATTER BANG
MOTHER! I HEARD HIM SAY IT - HE'S FOUND OUT AT LAST! BUT I WON'T LOOK AROUND - I DARE NOT - I MUSTN'T WEAKEN.

GEE, BEN, I CAN'T BELIEVE THAT YOUR DAD AND GWENDOLYN ARE REALLY MARRIED!!
IT'S TRUE!! THAT WAS THE BIG SECRET BETWEEN THE THREE OF US, BUT THEY GOT MARRIED AHEAD OF SCHEDULE!
THEY'LL ONLY BE AWAY OVER THE WEEK-END ON THEIR HONEYMOON!!
TO THINK THAT ALL THIS TIME, I THOUGHT GWEN WAS GOING TO MARRY, YOU!!
-AND THEN THE LITTLE CAT TURNS AROUND AND MARRIES YOUR FATHER!!
HERE, HERE, WINNIE!!

94 at Roosevelt High, 600 in Grade Schools Get Diplomas

Older Students Are Addressed By Senator Holt

Langley, Macfarland, Eliot Hine and Taft Also Hold Exercises.

Ninety-four pupils were graduated from Roosevelt High School last night. These graduates heard Senator-elect Rush D. Holt, of West Virginia, stress the importance of their education in facing the problems of the present day.

Yesterday at five junior high schools nearly 600 students were sent on their way to senior high school in graduation ceremonies. These exercises were at Langley, Eliot, Hine, Macfarland and Taft Junior High Schools.

Henry Gilligan presided at the Roosevelt program, which was opened with two selections by the school orchestra followed by the invocation of the Rev. C. E. Hawthorne, pastor of the Wallace Memorial Presbyterian Church.

Girl Is Valedictorian.

The Roosevelt valedictory was delivered by a girl, Catherine Elinor Hopping. Special awards to outstanding members of the class were made by Allan Davis, Roosevelt's principal. Diplomas were awarded by Miss Ethel Ginberg, president of the Roosevelt High School Alumni Association.

There were 155 pupils at the Langley Junior High School last night who received diplomas from the hands of Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, Board of Education member, who presided. The invocation was delivered by the Rev. W. F. Atkinson, pastor of the Dumbarton Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church. Richard M. Winfield, president of the class, gave the address of welcome, while the valedictory was delivered by Mary Kuntz and Edgar BonDurant. Mildred Rinandit presented the class gift to the school. Outstanding members of the class were cited by Chester W. Holmes, principal.

Robert L. Haycock, assistant superintendent of schools, presented diplomas to the 147 graduates of Macfarland Junior High School. The program was opened with an invocation by the Rev. William W. McIntyre, who was followed by Sam Loube, first honor student, who delivered greetings. The class gift was presented by the class president, Robert Jonscher. Talks on musical opportunities in Washington were given by Myrtle Leivear, second honor student, and Miss Shirley Friedman, third honor student.

Ceremonies at Hine.

Ceremonies at Hine Junior High School were opened with the invocation of the Rev. G. E. Brown. Edna Anderson, vice president of the student council, gave the address of welcome, while the president, Stanley Silverman, spoke on "Citizenship at Hine." Diplomas were awarded by Miss Jessie LaSalle, assistant superintendent of schools. Max Bobre, class member, played violin selections. There were 127 graduates.

One hundred and two were graduated from Eliot Junior High School. The program there was opened by an address of welcome by the class president and an invocation delivered by the Rev. J. H. Langsinger, of Holy Name Church. Talks on five attributes, from the letters of the school's name—eagerness, loyalty, inidividuality, obedience and truth—were made by Emily Sirola, Margaret Revere, Marie Buchanan, Perry Crabill and Margery Miller, respectively. Twenty-four graduates received citizenship awards from Miss A. I. Kinnear, principal. Miss Bertie Backus, assistant superintendent of schools, presented diplomas.

Charles Haynes was valedictorian at the Taft Junior High program, at which 64 were graduated. Francis Crilley, class president, delivered the address of welcome. Speeches by three class members, "Character Education at Taft," by Howard Phillips; "What Taft Has Done for Us," by Doris Thompson, and "Preparing for the Future," by Delia Nye, were heard. Joseph Stafford presented the class poem. Diplomas were awarded by the principal, Harry Baker, jr., with Jere J. Crane, assistant principal of schools.

Other Exercises Today.

The exercises at the remaining senior and junior high schools will be held today. Western will have its program at 1:30 p. m., while Central, McKinley and Eastern will have 8 p. m. programs. At Paul, Powell, Stuart, Deal and Gordon Junior High schools exercises will be at 2 p. m., while they will be at 8 p. m. at Jefferson Junior High School.
